

1

CURRICULUM
ARCHIVES

ARCHIVES

Ex LIBRIS
UNIVERSITATIS
ALBERTAENSIS

Universal Bindery Ltd.

BOOKBINDING — GOLD LETTERING

Edmonton, Alberta

Digitized by the Internet Archive in 2015

THE

LETTERING OF BACK

(Follow exact wording and arrangement)

Metropolitan Readers

STYLE

Bind new

Checkbind

Rebind ✓

Case

Reletter

COLOR

No. any

INSTRUCTIONS

Standard ✓

As Rub

Hand Sew

OTHER DIRECTIONS

opted, on the Report of the Catholic Members of the Committee, for use in the Catholic Schools of Lower Canada.

THE
METROPOLITAN FOURTH READER:

COMPILED FOR THE USE OF COLLEGES, ACADEMIES, AND THE
HIGHER CLASSES OF SELECT AND PARISH SCHOOLS.

M. P. Hammond
ARRANGED EXPRESSLY
FOR THE CATHOLIC SCHOOLS IN CANADA. 1866

BY A MEMBER OF THE ORDER OF THE HOLY CROSS.

MONTREAL:
D. & J. SADLIER & CO.,
CORNER NOTRE DAME AND ST. FRANCIS XAVIER STREETS.
1866.

Entered according to Act of the Provincial Legislature, in the Year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and sixty-five,

By D. & J. SADLIER & CO.,

In the office of the Registrar of the Province of Canada.

UNIVERSITY
OF ALBERTA LIBRARY

UNIVERSITY
OF ALBERTA LIBRARY

INTRODUCTION.

THE subject of education is certainly the great question of the day. Its practical importance can scarcely be exaggerated. Upon its solution depends the future of society, whether for weal or for woe. The leading spirits of our age and country have so apprehended it; and hence school-book succeeds school-book, and method follows method, with a view to the more efficacious imparting of knowledge to youth. The activity in this department, especially among those outside the Church, has been prodigious, and it seems to be on the increase. The characteristic trait of our age seems to be the desire to seize on the child, and to mould its tender mind and heart to a particular form. Our wide-spread system of common schools is but an expression of this feeling, which is based upon a knowledge of human nature and of philosophy. The child is "the father of the man," and the character of the latter will be but a development of the impressions made upon the mind and heart of the former, while these were susceptible and plastic. If the flower be blighted, or the twig be bent, in the nursery, it will be difficult to render the matured plant either healthy or straight.

The great fault of our common-school system is found in its either wholly ignoring or greatly undervaluing the religious element in education. Without religion, education is, at best, but a doubtful boon, and it may be even a positive evil. Considering the innate tendency of our nature to evil, and the difficulty of training it up to good, the religious element is essential in the educational process. No other principle can supply an efficient curb to the headlong passions of youth; no other can effectually train up children to the practice of a sound morality, thereby making them good citizens by making them first good Christians. Without religion we may possibly succeed in making them decorous, if not decent, pagans; we cannot certainly hope to make them good, much less exemplary, Christians. The teachings of revelation, the facts of history, the lessons conveyed by our own daily observation and experience, and the frightful increase of vice whenever and wherever a contrary system has been adopted, all combine to confirm this conclusion.

We would not exclude secular education—very far from it; but we would constantly blend with it the holy influences of religion. Christian and secular instruction should go hand in hand; they cannot be consistently or safely divorced, at least among Christians. Not that we would thrust Christian teaching on the youthful mind too frequently, or on unseasonable occasions, so as to produce a feeling of weariness or disgust. This is but too common a fault among our over-zealous, but—in this respect at least—not over-wise Bible and Sabbath Christians of the day, who, but too often, in the name of religion, repress the buoyant smile of childhood, cast a gloomy shadow over the spring-tide of life, thereby infusing into the child an early, and, therefore, very deeply seated disgust for religion, and, in the end, producing an abundant harvest of indifferentists and infidels. We every day see the sad effects of this overwrought zeal and mistaken system of instruction.

We would, on the contrary, seek to make religion amiable in the eyes and dear to the hearts of the little children whom Christ so dearly loved. It should gild with its light and warm with its rays every pursuit of the school-room, even as the sun enlightens and cheers the objects of nature. We would not intrude the religious influence on the mind and heart of childhood, but we would seek to distil it gently, even as God distils the dews of heaven on the tender plants of the morning. We would carefully exclude from the reading-lessons all the poison of noxious principles, and even all worldly and frivolous matter; and we would do this all the more rigidly whenever the poison would become the more dangerous, because latent, or gilded with the fascinations of style, or the gorgeous imagery of poetry. We would rigidly exclude Byron, in spite of his Syren Song. Thus improved, secular instruction would put on new beauty and obtain a greatly increased influence for good; it would be "clothed with strength from on high," and the light of heaven would play around its pathway. It would then become doubly attractive to childhood; for the aroma of religion, diffused through all its departments, would lend it a charm and give it a zest which no earthly condiment could impart.

This idea, we believe, has been carried out to a great extent at least, in the new Series of Metropolitan Readers just issued by the Messrs. Sadlier of New York, particularly in the Fourth Reader, to which our attention has been more specially called. The matter of the lessons is varied, and though far from being exclusively religious, possesses, in general, a religious or moral tendency, and always leaves a good impression. There is no lesson without its moral. The selection was made by a religious lady of the Order of the Holy Cross, who took care to submit her work to the judgment of gentlemen well known for their critical acumen and literary taste, and had it edited by another lady of New York, who has merited well of American Catholic literature. Under such circumstances it does not surprise us to find that the collection possesses great merit, and that it is likely to become eminently popular in our schools, and thereby to accomplish much good.

The Fourth Reader is divided into two parts: the first containing the principles and practice of elocution, and the second, well-selected and appropriate readings, both in poetry and in prose. Two things in particular strike us as distinctive of this collection of readings for children: first, the preference given to American subjects and to American authors over those which are foreign; and, second, the copious selections from the writings of the principal Catholic writers of the day, both in Europe and in America. There is scarcely a prominent writer of this class from whose pen we have not at least one specimen. What renders this feature of the book the more valuable, is the circumstance that the writings of some of these distinguished authors are not very generally known or easily accessible to the mass of readers in this country. It is well that our children should learn that there are good and elegant works of literature in the Church as well as outside of it, and it is highly important that they should be imbued, from an early age, with a taste for this kind of reading. Among the foreign Catholic writers from whom selections are furnished, we notice the names of Cardinal Wiseman, Dr. Newman, Balmez, Chateaubriand, and Digby. Among our own writers, we perceive with pleasure the names of several of our archbishops, bishops, and clergymen, besides those of such distinguished laymen as Dr. Brownson, Dr. Huntington, McLeod, Shea, Miles, and others. The writings of these are interspersed with judicious selections from our standard American authors, Irving, Prescott, Bancroft, and Paulding.

We take pleasure in recommending this valuable series of Readers to the patronage of our Catholic colleges, schools, and academies.

CONTENTS.

	PAGE
INTRODUCTION, by Bishop Spalding	iii

PART I.

PRINCIPLES OF ELOCUTION.

Introduction	9
Proper position	11
Holding the Book	12
Respiration	12
Exercise	12
Articulation	12
Exercises in Articulation	15
Pronunciation	19
Exercises in Emphasis.....	22
INFLECTION	23
Examples in Inflection	24
“ “ “ for two voices	26
“ “ “ for three voices.....	27
EXERCISES IN ELOCUTION. Examples	31
Spirited Declamation.....	31
Gay, Brisk, and Humorous Description.....	31
Unimpassioned Narrative.....	32
Dignified Sentiment.....	33
Solemn and Impressive Thoughts.....	33
Awe and Solemnity	33
Deep Solemnity, Awe, Consternation	34
Monotone.....	35
QUANTITY	38
Examples in Quantity.....	38
RATE OR MOVEMENT OF THE VOICE	40
Slow Movement	41
Reverence	41
Melancholy	41
Profound Solemnity.....	42

	PAGE
Grandeur, Vastness	42
Moderate Movement	42
Lively Movement.....	42
Brisk Movement.....	43
Rapid Movement	44
SEMITONE, OR PLAINTIVENESS OF SPEECH.....	45
Examples of Plaintive Utterance	Motherwell. 46
“ “ “ “	Bryant. 47
“ “ “ “	Hood. 48
“ The Past	Wilson. 49
“ Where are the Dead	49
“ The Charge of the Six Hundred	Tennyson. 50
“ Give me Three Grains of Corn	51
“ The Leaves.....	A. S. Stephens. 51
“ The First Crusaders before Jerusalem.....	52
“ Lament for the Death of Owen Roe O’Niel	Davis. 53
“ The Wexford Massacre.....	M. J. Barry. 54
“ Abou Ben Adham.....	Leigh Hunt. 55
“ The Reaper	Longfellow. 55
“ Mental Beauty.....	Akenside. 56
“ The Soliloquy of King Richard.....	Shakspeare. 57
“ Spring Flowers.....	Howitt. 57
“ The Modern Blue-Stocking	58
“ Invocation	Mackay. 59
“ Time.....	G. D. Prentice. 59
“ Poetasters	Pope. 59
“ Richard’s Resignation	Shakspeare. 60
“ Eve’s Regret on quitting Paradise	Milton. 61
“ Love due to the Creator.....	G. Griffin. 61
“ A Child’s First Impression of a Star	Willis. 62
“ The Carrier-Pigeon.....	Moore. 62
“ To the Passion-Flower	64
“ Advice to an Affected Speaker.....	Le Bruyère. 65
Remarks to Teachers.....	66

PART II.

POETRY.

The Landing of Columbus	Samuel Rogers. 69
Mary, Queen of Mercy	James Clarence Mangan. 75
Language.....	O. W. Holmes. 82
Indian Names	Mrs. Sigourney. 86

42	Times goes by Turns.....	Robert Southwell.	95
42	Mary Stuart's Last Prayer.....	J. G. Smythe.	102
42	The Virgin Mary's Knight.....	Thos. D. McGee.	107
43	My Life is like the Summer Rose.....	R. H. Wilde.	112
44	Gentle River.....	from the Spanish.	139
45	If thou couldst be a Bird.....	Rev. F. W. Faber.	143
46	The Cross in the Wilderness.....	Mrs. Hemans.	149
47	The Parrot.....	Thomas Campbell.	156
48	The Constancy of Nature.....	R. H. Dana.	161
49	The Virgin Martyr.....	Massinger.	167
49	The Shepherds' Song.....	Tasso.	177
50	Advice to a Young Critic.....	Alexander Pope.	185
51	Old Times.....	Gerald Griffin.	194
51	The Wild Lily and the Passion-Flower.....	Rev. A. Roquette.	205
52	The Cherwell Water-Lily.....	Father Faber.	217
53	Cæsar's Offer of Amnesty to Cato.....	Addison.	221
54	Lord James of Douglass.....	Aytoun.	225
55	St. Agnes.....	Alfred Tennyson.	233
56	The Dying Girl.....	R. D. Williams.	239
57	The Sister of Charity.....	Gerald Griffin.	246
57	The Ministry of Angels.....	Edmund Spenser.	253
58	Melrose Abbey.....	Sir Walter Scott.	261
59	Horatius.....	T. B. Macaulay.	271
59	The Crusaders.....	Wm. Wordsworth.	280
59	Mary Magdalen.....	Callanan.	290
59	Martyrdom of St. Agnes.....	Aubrey De Vere.	294
59	Lament of Mary, Queen of Scots.....	Robert Burns.	306
59	An Hour at the-Old Play-Ground.....	Anon.	315
59	Stella Matutina, ora pro nobis.....	Dr. Huntington.	321
59	"My Father's Growing Old".....	Elizabeth G. Barber.	323
59	To the Robin.....	Eliza Cook.	333
59	Christmas.....	Lord John Mannors.	338
59	The High-born Ladye.....	Thos. Moore.	341
59	Marco Bozzaris.....	Fitz-Greene Halleck.	349
59	Cardinal Wolsey and Cromwell.....	Shakspeare.	353
59	Catholic Ruins.....	Farther Caswell.	365
59	The Dying Child on New Year's Eve.....	Tennyson.	369
59	The Art of Book-keeping.....	Thos. Hood.	377
59	Who is my Neighbor.....	Anon.	383
59	There were Merry Days in England.....		387
59	Love of Country.....	Sir Walter Scott.	393
59	The Holy Wells of Ireland.....	John Fraser.	398
59	Abraham and the Fire-worshipper.....	Household Words.	411
59	The Celtic Cross.....	T. D. McGee.	418
59	Boyhood's Years.....	Rev. C. Mehan.	425
59	The Indian Boat.....	Moore.	431

	PAGE
The Immortal Soul of Man.....	Byron. 437
Bingen on the Rhine.....	Hon. Mrs. Norton. 443
The Ancient Tombs.....	Frances Brown. 448
On Pride.....	Pope. 455

PROSE.

Character of Columbus.....	Washington Irving. 67
Philanthropy and Charity.....	O. A. Brownson, 70
Love for the Church.....	O. A. Brownson. 73
Religious Memorials.....	Sir Humphrey Davy. 77
The Battle of Carillon	F. X. Garneau. 79
The Language of a Man of Education.....	S. T. Coleridge. 84
The Indians.....	Judge Story. 87
St. Vincent, Deacon and Martyr.....	Mrs. Anna Jameson. 91
The Seven Sleepers of Ephesus.....	Mrs. Anna Jameson. 93
Catholic Missions in the Northwest.....	George Bancroft. 96
Catholic Missions—continued.....	100
The Discovery of America.....	Thos. D. McGee. 103
The Discovery of America—continued.....	105
The Young Catholic....	Abbé Martinez. 109
The Children of the Poor.....	Charles Lamb. 111
The Blessed Sacrament.....	F. W. Faber. 113
The Blind Martyr.....	Cardinal Wiseman. 116
The Blind Martyr—continued.....	119
Peace Tribunals.....	Archbishop Kenrick. 124
First Battle on the Plains of Abraham.....	F. X. Garneau. 125
First Battle on the Plains of Abraham—continued.....	129
The Spirit of the Age.....	Rev. J. W. Cummings. 132
Death of Alonzo de Aguilar.....	Wm. H. Prescott. 133
Death of Alonzo de Aguilar—continued.....	137
St. Peter's Entry into Rome.....	Archbishop Hughes. 141
Novel Reading.....	Anonymous. 145
Death of Father Marquette.....	J. G. Shea. 148
Early Days at Emmettsburg.....	Mrs. E. A. Seton. 152
Portrait of a Virtuous and Accomplished Woman.....	Fénelon. 157
Execution of Mary, Queen of Scots.....	Agnes Strickland. 158
The Humming-Bird.....	John J. Audubon. 162
Description of Nature in the Christian Fathers	Humboldt. 163
Queen Elizabeth of Hungary.....	Montalenbert. 169
Ages of Faith.....	Kenelm H. Digby. 171
Ages of Faith—continued.....	174
War of 1812, and death of Gen. Brock.....	179
The Battle of Queenston Heights.....	181
Loss and Gain.....	Rev. J. H. Newman. 186
God's Share.....	Donald McLeod. 193

	PAGE
The Last Hours of Louis XVI.....	Alison. 191
Character of the Irish Peasantry.....	Jonah Barrington. 196
St. Frances of Rome.....	Lady Fullerton. 199
Spring.....	H. W. Longfellow. 201
Martyrdom of Fathers de Brebeuf and Lalemant... Ferland.	Rev. J. B. A. 203
Illumination at St. Peter's.....	Bishop England. 206
Illumination at St. Peter's—continued.....	209
The Son's Return.....	Gerald Griffin. 212
The Son's Return—continued.....	215
Edward the Confessor.....	Lingard. 219
The Discontented Miller.....	Goldsmith. 223
The Jesuits.....	Mrs. J. Sadlier. 227
Education.....	Kenelm H. Digby. 229
Education—continued.....	232
Infidel Philosophy and Literature.....	Robertson. 234
Infidel Philosophy and Literature—continued.....	237
Marie Antoinette.....	Edmund Burke. 241
The Old Emigré.....	Mary R. Mitford. 244
Sir Thomas More to his Daughter.....	248
Influence of Catholicity on Civil Liberty.....	Bishop Spalding. 250
The Choice.....	George H. Miles. 254
The Choice—continued.....	257
Landing of the Ursulines and Hospital Nuns at Quebec.....	260
The First Solitary of the Thebais.....	Chateaubriand. 264
The First Solitary of the Thebais—continued.....	267
The Exile's Return.....	Mrs. J. Sadlier. 274
Mount Orient.....	Gerald Griffin. 275
De Frontenac.....	Bibaud. 281
The Catacombs.....	Dr. Manahan. 283
The Religious Military Orders.....	Archbishop Purcell. 287
Dialogue with the Gout.....	Dr. Franklin. 291
Magnanimity of a Christian Emperor.....	Schlegel. 293
European Civilization.....	Balmez. 297
St. Francis de Sales' Last Will and Testament.....	St. Francis de Sales. 299
Arch-Confraternity of San Giovanni Decollato.....	Maguire. 302
The Confraternity "Della Morte".....	Maguire. 304
The Plague of Locusts.....	Dr. Newman. 308
The Plague of Locusts—continued.....	310
Christian and Pagan Rome.....	Dr. Neligan. 316
Rosemary in the Sculptor's Studio.....	Dr. Huntington. 319
Religious Orders.....	Leibnitz. 321
Resignation of Charles V., Emperor of Germany.....	Robertson. 325
Resignation of Charles V.—continued.....	328
Letter from Pliny to Marcellinus.....	Melmoth. 331
The Religion of Catholics.....	Dr. Doyle. 335

	PAGE
The Wife.....	Washington Irving. 337
The Truce of God.....	Fredet. 340
Advice to a Young Lady on her Marriage.....	Dean Swift. 343
A Catholic Maiden of the Old Times.....	Rev. J. Boyce. 345
✓ De Laval, first Bishop of Quebec.....	H. J. Morgan. 352
✓ Rome Saved by Female Virtue.....	Nathaniel Hooke. 357
Rome Saved by Female Virtue—continued.....	360
The Friars and the Knight.....	Digby. 363
Gil Blas and the Parasite.....	Le Sage. 366
Anecdote of King Charles II. of Spain.....	371
✓ Spiritual Advantages of Catholic Cities.....	Digby. 372
On Letter Writing.....	Blackwood's Magazine. 373
The Alhambra by Moonlight.....	W. Irving. 380
Best Kind of Revenge.....	Chambers. 381
Edwin, King of Northumbria.....	Lingard. 384
Cleanliness.....	Addison. 386
Memory and Hope.....	Jas. K. Paulding. 389
The Charmed Serpent.....	Chateaubriand. 394
Two Views of Nature.....	“ 395
Wants.....	Jas. K. Paulding. 400
Wants—continued.....	402
Vesuvius and the Bay of Naples.....	Rev. G. F. Haskins. 405
Ireland.....	“ “ 407
Patriotism and Christianity.....	Chateaubriand. 414
Peter the Hermit.....	Michaud. 416
Can the Soldier be an Atheist.....	Chateaubriand. 419
Japanese Martyrs.....	Miss Caddell. 421
Japanese Martyrs—continued.....	423
On the Look of a Gentleman.....	Hazlitt. 427
Social Characters.....	Chateaubriand. 429
Death of Charles II. of England.....	Robertson. 432
Religion an Essential Element in Education.....	Stapf. 434
Books as Sources of Self-cultivation.....	“ 438
Man's Destiny.....	“ 441
On Good Breeding.....	Anon. 446
Execution of Sir Thomas More.....	450
The Influence of Devotion on the Happiness of Life.....	Blair. 453
Adherence to Principle commands Respect.....	Miss Brownson. 457
Mount Lebanon and its Cedars.....	Patterson. 459
The Siege of Quebec by Montgomery.....	461
Champlain.....	H. J. Morgan. 465
Jacques Cartier at Stadacona.....	Garneau. 469
Jacques Cartier at Hochelaga.....	Abbé Ferland. 472
The City of Montreal.....	P. J. O. Chanveau. 475

THE FOURTH READER.

Part I.

PRINCIPLES OF ELOCUTION.

INTRODUCTION.

THE art of reading well is one of those rare accomplishments which all wish to possess, a few think they have, and others, who see and believe that it is not the unacquired gift of genius, labor to obtain. But it will be found that excellence in this, as in every thing else of value, is the result of well-directed effort, and the reward of unremitting industry.

To read and speak, so as at once to convey intelligence to the mind and pleasure to the ear ; to give utterance to thoughts and sentiments with such force and effect as to quicken the pulse, to flush the cheek, to warm the heart, to expand the soul, and to make the hearer feel as though he were holding converse with the mighty spirit that conceived the thought and composed the sentence, is, it is true, no ordinary attainment ; but it is far from being either above the power or beyond the reach of art.

To breathe life through language, to give coloring and force to the thoughts, is not merely an accomplishment ; it is an acquisition of priceless value—a power of omnipotent agency, when wisely and skilfully used.

But this degree of excellence is to be attained only through the influence of sure and multiplied principles ;—principles that are universal ; principles that are founded in nature.

Modes of delivery must inevitably vary with the susceptibility of the reader to imaginative impulses, and with the nature of his appreciation of what he reads. To prescribe rules for what, in the nature of things, must be governed by the answering emotion of the moment, and by a sympathizing intelligence, may continue to be attempted, but no positive system is likely to be the result. Language cannot be so labelled and marked that its delivery can be taught by any scheme of notation.

Emotional expression cannot be gauged and regulated by any elocutionary law; and, though there has been no lack of lawgivers, their jurisdiction has never extended far enough to make them an acknowledged tribunal in the republic of letters and art.

Mr. Kean does not bow to the law laid down by Mr. Kemble or Mr. Macready; Mr. Sheridan differs from Mr. Walker, and Mr. Knowles dissents from them both.

The important step, I believe, in regard to practice in expressive reading, is to set before the pupil such exercises as may sufficiently enlarge his interest and be penetrable to his understanding. An indifferent, unsympathizing habit of delivery is often fixed upon him, solely by accustoming him to read what is either repulsive to his taste, or above his comprehension. As well might we put him to the task of reading backwards, as of reading what is too dull or difficult to kindle his attention or awaken his enthusiasm. Reading backwards is not an unprofitable exercise, when the object is to limit his attention to the proper enunciation of words, isolated from their sense; but when we would have him unite an expressive delivery to a good articulation, we must give him for vocal interpretation, such matter as he can easily understand.

That the study and practice of Elocution should form a branch in our systems of Education, is now generally conceded. The true method of conveying a knowledge of this art is, however, still open to much discussion. Experience has confirmed me in the opinion that elaborated artificial rules are almost "worse than useless," for they fetter all the natural impulses of the Pupil, and too frequently substitute mannerisms and affectations for a direct, earnest, natural method of delivery. And yet Elocution has its rules, as essential and as necessary to be understood and studied as are the rules which govern a thorough knowledge of the exact sciences. To simplify these rules, and to present only those which are absolutely requisite to form a strictly natural and finished reader, has been my aim in the following pages.

A knowledge of the positive rules which govern Inflections, and practice on the same to enable the pupil to inflect with ease; the general knowledge of rules governing Emphatic stress, and a practice on Modulation, in its varieties of level, emotional, and imitative tones, are all the necessary mechanical auxiliaries which Elocution, as an art, affords to the student.

These essential rules I now present, condensed into the briefest and most practical form, the due practice of which in classes, accompanied by the application of the principles to the daily Reading from Examples I have furnished in this work, will, I trust, materially assist in the formation of an eminently natural and correct style of Reading.

I claim no originality in the creation of any new system of Elocutionary Instruction. I have only compiled and adapted rules from acknowledged masters of the art, rejecting those which experience has satisfied me are but extraneous and non-essential.

PROPER POSITIONS.

Whether sitting or standing, the body should be kept erect, the head up, and the shoulders back and down. The chest will thus be expanded, breathing be free and full, and the vocal organs left to an unembarrassed action. A standing position is the best—it gives more power. Support the weight of the body on the left foot; advance the right about three inches, and turn the toes of both feet moderately out. This position is termed the second right; it will be changed to the first right, by throwing the weight of the body on the right foot, which may sometimes be convenient for relief, where the reading is long continued.

HOLDING THE BOOK.

The book should be kept in the left hand, in a nearly horizontal position from the lower point of the breast, at a distance of six or eight inches from it. The voice will thus be unobstructed, and the face, which is the index of the soul, in complete view of the audience. The right hand may be employed in turning the pages, and, in proper cases, in light, significant gesture.

RESPIRATION.

To read with elegance and power, the function of breathing must be under entire control. The compass and quality of the voice depend upon it. To secure this control, it will be found highly useful to train the lungs to their most pliant and energetic action, on some respiratory exercise, as below:

“The chest so exercised, improves its strength;
And quick vibrations through the system drive
The restless blood.”

EXERCISE.

1. Draw in the breath very slowly, until the lungs are entirely filled.
2. Emit the breath in the same manner, continuing to breathe as long as possible.
3. Take in a full, quick breath, and expire it in an audible, prolonged sound of the letter h.
4. Inspire with a sudden, impulsive effort; then exhale in the style of a strong, whispered cough.
5. Take in and give back the breath through the nostrils, fully, but slowly, the mouth being entirely closed.
6. Exercise the lungs in the manner of violent panting.

ARTICULATION.

A perfect articulation is the great excellence of good reading and speaking. There are other vocal qualities which rank high in the elocutionary scale, as inflection, emphasis, and expression—but they are all inferior to this, and dependent upon it. They have no power to make clear to the mind those words or phrases which, by reason of imperfect enunciation, are not received by the ear. The student should be led, therefore, to early and persevering practice on the Elementary Sounds of the language, on difficult Consonant Combinations, and on unaccented Syllables. The effect would be almost magical. It would be marked by all the purity and completeness which Austin's Chironomia contemplates, when it says: "In just articulation, the words are not hurried over, nor precipitated syllable over syllable; they are delivered out from the lips as beautiful coins, newly issued from the mint, deeply and accurately impressed, perfectly finished, neatly struck by the proper organs, distinct, sharp, in due succession, and of due weight."

Defects in articulation may proceed either from over-eagerness in utterance, or from sluggishness and inattention. We will here cite some of the Vowel and Consonant sounds which are most frequently marred by a vicious articulation. The proper sound of the a is often too decidedly perverted in the syllables and terminations in al, ar, ant, an, ance, &c., as in the following words: fatal, particular, scholar, separate, arrogant, honorable, perseverance, preliminary, descendant, ordinance, &c., in which the a should be slightly obscured, but not debased into the e of her, or the u in but.

Syllables and terminations in o, ow, and on, are badly articulated by many, who say potator for potato, comprumise for compromise, tobaccernist for tobacconist, innervate for innovate, feller for fellow, winder for window, meller for mellow, hist'ry for history, hallered for hallowed, meader for meadow, philoserpher for philosopher, colerny for colony, abrurgate for abrogate, &c. The o in such words as horizon, motion, Boston, &c., may be slightly obscured, but not dropped.

The unaccented u is often erroneously suppressed, or made to sound like e, in such words as particular, voluble, regular, singular, educate, &c. The full, diphthongal sound of the u in mute should be given to the above words, as well as to the following: nude, tune, tube, suit, assume, nature, mixture, moisture, vesture, vulture, geniture, structure, gesture, statue, institution, constitute, virtue, tutor, subdued, tuber, duty, duly, &c.

There are some miscellaneous vulgarisms in the rendering of Vowel sounds, to which we will but briefly allude. Do not omit the long, round sound of o (as it occurs in hōme) in such words as boat, coat, &c. Do not give to the a in scarce the sound of u in purse. Do not say *tremendyou*s for tremendous, or colyume for column (pronounced kollum, the u short as in us, and not diphthongal, as in use). Give to the diphthong oi its full sound in such words as noise, poise, point, &c. Do not trill the r in the wrong place. Do not give the sound of u to the a in Indian (properly pronounced Indyan). Do not give the sound of fle or fel to the ful of awful, beautiful, and the like; of um to the m in chasm, prism, patriotism, &c. Do not dismiss the letter d from such words as and, minds, hands, depends, sends, &c. Do not say git for get, idee for idea, thar for there, po'try for poëtry, jest for just, jine for join, ketch for catch, kittle for kettle, stah for star, pint for point, fur for far, ben for been (correctly pronounced bin), doos for does (correctly pronounced duz), agin for again (correctly pronounced agen), ware for were (correctly pronounced wur), tharefore for therefore (correctly pronounced thurfore), air for are (correctly pronounced ar, the a as in far). It is a common fault with slovenly readers to dispense with the final g in words of more than one syllable, ending in ing. Such readers tell us of their startin' early in the mornin', seein' nobody comin', &c., giving us to infer that they either have a bad cold in the head, or have been but indifferently attentive to their elocutionary studies. Always avoid this vulgarism, whether in conversation, or in reading aloud.

Where consonants precede or follow the letter s, care should be taken to avoid the too frequent practice of improperly dropping the sound of one letter or more. For example, in the line,—“And thou exist'st and striv'st as duty prompts,”—the sound of the italicized consonants is often imperfectly rendered. So we hear acts incorrectly pronounced ax ; facts, fax ; reflects, reflex ; expects, expex, &c. Great liberties are often taken with the letter r. There are speakers who say bust for burst, fust for first, dust for durst, &c. We also hear Cubar for Cuba, lawr instead of law, wawr instead of war, pawtial instead of partial, Larrence instead of Lawrence, stawm instead of storm, mawn instead of morn, cawn instead of corn. The vibrant sound of the r should not be muffled in such words as rural, rugged, trophy, &c. ; nor should the r be trilled in care, margin, &c.

The sound of the h, in syllables commencing with shr, should be heeded ; as in the line, "He shrilly shrieking shrank from shriving him." In these and similar words the h is often shorn of its due force, and, by some bad speakers, is entirely suppressed. To the preservation of its aspirate sound in such words as what, whale, whither, when, &c., particular attention should be given.

A thorough and well-defined articulation will leave a hearer in no doubt as to which word is meant in articulating the following : when, wen ; whether, weather ; what, wot ; wheel, weal ; where, wear ; whist, wist ; while, wile ; whet, wet , why, way ; which, witch ; whig, wig ; whin, win ; whine, wine ; whirled, world ; whit, wit ; whither, wither ; white, wight ; wheeled, wield.

Exercises.

He is content in either place ;

He is content in neither place.

They wandered weary over wastes and deserts ;

They wandered weary over waste sand deserts.

I saw the prints without emotion ;

I saw the prince without emotion.

That last still night ;

That lasts till night.

His cry moved me ;

His crime moved me.

He could pay nobody ;

He could pain nobody.

He built him an ice house ;
 He built him a nice house.
 My heart is awed within me ;
 My heart is sawed within me.
 A great error often exists ;
 A great terror often exists.
 He is content in either situation ;
 He is content in neither situation.
 Whom ocean feels through all her countless waves ;
 Who motion feels through all her countless waves.
 My brothers ought to owe nothing ;
 My brother sought to own nothing.

In the following exercises, most of the noteworthy difficulties in the articulation of our language have been introduced. In some of the sentences, it will be seen, little regard has been had to the sense which they may make ; the object being either to accumulate difficulties in Consonant combinations, or to illustrate varieties of Vowel sounds and their equivalents

Exercises in Articulation.

1. A father's fate calls Fancy to beware. All in the hall here haul the awl all ways. Aunt's heart and hearth are better than her head. And shall I, sir'rah, guarantee your plaid ? Arraign his reign to-day ; the great rain gauge. And so our whaling ended all in wailing. Accent' the accent accurately always.

2. Awful the awe ; nor broad ought Tom to maul. The bulb, the bribe, the barb, the babbling bibber. Biding thou budg'dst, and budging bravely bidest. Bubbles and hubbubs barbarous and public. Canst give the blind a notion of an ocean ? Churlish chirographers, chromatic chanters. Chivalry's chief chid the churl's chaffering choice chimerical.

3. Call her ; her choler at the collar scorning. Crime craves the Czar's indictment curious. Despised despoilers tracked the dastard's doom. Diaph'ānous delusions dep'recate. Drachmas disdain dispersed despotically. Earn earth's dear tears, whose dearth the heart's hearth inurns.

4. England her men metes there a generous measure. Cæsar deceives the people from his seat. The key to that machine is in the field. Friends, heads and heifers, leopards, bury any. Examine, estimate the eggs exactly.

5. Faults? He had faults; I said he was not false. Facundious Philip's flippant fluency. Ghastly the gibbous anger gorges gnomes. Go! though rough coughs and hiccoughs plough thee through! Grudg'dst thou, and gib'dst thou, Gorgon, with thy gyves?

6. He humbly held the hostler's horse an hour. His honest rhetoric exhilarates. Hear'st thou this hermit's heinous here-sy? He twists the texts to suit the several sects. Hōpe, bōats, rōads, cōats, and lōads of clōaks and sōap. Why harass'dst thou him thus inhumanly?

7. In either place he dwells, in neither fails. Is he in life through one great terror led? In one great error rather is he not? Is there a name—is there an aim more lofty? I say the judges ought to arrest the culprit. I say the judges sought to arrest the culprit.

8. Janglingly jealous jeered the Jacobin. June's azure day sees the jay gayly jump. Knavish the knack could compass such a knot. Keep cool, and learn that cavils cannot kill. Kentucky knows the dark and bloody ground.

9. Long, lank, and lean, he illy lectured me. Lo! there behold the scenes of those dark ages. The scenes of those dark cages, did you say? Mete'orous and meteor'ic vapors. Mulctedst thou him? In misery he mopes.

10. Myrrh by the murderous myrmidons was brought. Man is a microcosm, a mimic world. Mute moping, maimed, in misery's murmurs whelm'd. Mammon's main monument a miscreant makes. Moments their solemn realm to Memnon give.

11. Neigh me no nays; know me now, neighbor Dobbin. Nipt now the flower is riv'n, forever fall'n. Nymphs range the forests still till rosy dawn. Nay! did I say I scream? I said ice cream. Never thou clasp'dst more fleeting triumphs here.

12. O'er wastes and deserts, waste sand deserts straying. On the hard wharf the timid dwarf was standing. Oh, note the occasion, yeoman, hautboy, beau! Or'thoëpy precedes orthog'raphy. Ob'ligatory objects then he offered.

13. Pre'cedents ruled prece'dent Pres'idents. Poor painted pomp of pleasure's proud parade. Pharmacy far more farmers cures than kills. Psyche (si-kë) puts out the sphinx's pseudo pipe. Politics happ'n to be uppermost. The room's perfumed' with per'fumes popular.

14. Quilp quoted Quarles's quiddities and quirks. Queens and coquets quickly their conquests quit. Quacks in a quandary were quaking there. Quench'd'st thou the quarrel of the quid'nuncs then? Quiescent Quixotism and quibbling quizzing.

15. Rave, wretched rover, erring, rash, and perjured. Rude rugged rocks reëchoed with his roar. Rhinoceroses armed, and Russian bears. Round rang her shrill sharp, frenzied shriek for mercy. Ruin and rapine, ruthless wretch, attend thee!

16. Six slim, sleek saplings slothfully he sawed. Stridulous strays the stream through forests strange. Snarl'st thou at me? Vainly thou splash'dst and strov'dst. Shall shuffling shift thy shrinking, shrieking shame? Schisms, chasms and prisms, phantasms, and frenzies dire. Smith, smooth, smug, smart, smirked, smattered, smoked, and smiled. Sudden he sadd'n'd; wherefore did he sadd'n?

17. The heir his hair uncovered to the air. That last still night, that lasts till night's forgot! The strident trident's strife strides strenuous. The dupes shall see the dupe survey the scene. The martial corps regarded not the corpse.

18. The ringing, clinging, blighting, smiting curse. The storms still strove, but the masts stood the struggle. The steel these steal still ster'eotypes (the er as in terror) their stigma. The stalk these talkers strike stands strong and steady. Thawing, it thermometrically thrives.

19. Temptations tantamount indictment's debtor. Tenth or ten thousandth breaks the chain alike. Think'st thou the heights, depths, breadths, thou'rt thorough in? The soldiers skilled in war, a thousand men? The soldiers killed in war a thousand men. The prints the prince selected were superb.

20. Then if thou fall'st, thou fall'st a blessed martyr. Thou liv'st—liv'st did I say? appear'st in the Senate! Though thy cry moved me, thy crime moved me more. These things can never make your government. Thou barb'dst the dart that wounded me, alas!

21. Thou startl'dst me, and still thou startl'st me. Thou watch'st there where thou watch'dst, sir, when I came. Thou black'n'dst and thou black'n'st me in vain. Thought'st thou whose thoughts of thine could thrill me through? The intriguing rogue's vague brogue plagues like an ague.

22. Thou slept'st, great ocean, hush'dst thy myriad waves. The wolf whose howl, the owl whose hoot is heard. The new tune played on Tuesday suits the duke. Too soon thou chuckl'dst o'er the gold thou stolest. Twanged short and sharp, like the shrill swallow's cry.

23. Use makes us use it even as usage rules (this last u like the o in move). Umpires usurp the usurer's usual custom. Utility's your ultima'tum, then. Untunable, untractable, unthinking. Urge me no more; your arguments are useless. The tutor's revolution is reduced.

24. Vain, vacillating, ve'herent, he veers forever. Whetting his scythe, the mower singeth blithe. While whiling time at whist, why will you whisper? Whelmed in the waters were the whirling wheels. Where is the ware that is to wear so well?

25. White were the wights who waggishly were winking. Wrenched by the hand of violence from hope. Wouldst thou not highly—wouldst not holily? With short shrill shrieks flits by on leathern wing. Xerxes, Xantippē, Xen'o-phon, and Xanthus.

26. Yachts yield the yeomen youthful exercise. You pay nobody? Do you pain nobody? Your kindness overwhelms me—makes me bankrupt. Zeuxis, Zenobia, Zeus, and Zoroas'ter. Zephyr these heifers indolently fans.

PRONUNCIATION.

A and the when under emphasis have the vowel sounded long; as "I said ā man, not thē man." But a when unemphatic or unaccented is always short; as, "We saw ă child playing about." The used before a vowel, takes the long sound of e, but before a consonant, the short: as, "Thē oranges were good, but thē dates bad. These distinctions deserve particular attention in primary and intermediate schools. They are much neglected. My when emphatic takes the long sound; as, "It is my book, not yours," but in most other cases it takes the short sound. Even in reading the Sacred Scriptures, good taste prefers the short sound, except in expressions of marked solemnity, or in connection with the Holy Name. By seldom adopts the short sound. In colloquial phrases like the following, however, it is allowable; as, "Bŷ-the-by, or bŷ-the-way." These examples are like words of three syllables, with the accent on the third. In the word myself, the y never takes the long sound, the syllable self receiving the stress when it is emphatic, except when referring to the Deity. There, when used as an adverb of place, takes the full sound of ê (long a); as, "The boy was certainly thêre;" but when merely employed to introduce a word or phrase, it takes the lighter sound of e; as, "Oh, there is the boy." So with their; as, "It is thêir duty, not yours." "They will not neglect their duty." In the same manner your, when emphatic, sounds as the word ever does; but unemphatic, it shortens into yŭr, having less the sound of long u. The following seven words used as adjectives always have the e sounded—aged, learned, blessed, cursed, winged, striped, streaked; as, "An agéd man; a learnéd professor; the blesséd God," not "An ag'd man, &c." When this word is compounded, however, the ed is short; as, "A full-ag'd person."

"Those who wish to pronounce elegantly" as Walker has justly said, "must give particular attention to these syllables, as a neat pronunciation of these, forms one of the greatest beauties of speaking." But great defects are common in this respect, not only in the humbler grades of society, but among the educated and refined. In the pulpit, in the halls of legislation, everywhere, indeed, this is more or less the case.

The word modulation is derived from a Latin word signifying to measure off properly, to regulate ; and it may be applied to singing and dancing as well as speaking. It is not enough that syllables and words are enunciated properly, and that the marks of punctuation are duly observed. Unless the voice sympathetically adapts itself to the emotion or sentiment, and regulates its pauses accordingly, it will but imperfectly interpret what it utters.

The study of pronunciation, in the ancient and most comprehensive sense of that word, comprised not only the consideration of what syllables of a word ought to be accented, but of what words of a sentence ought to be emphasized. The term Emphasis, from a Greek word signifying to point out or show, is now commonly used to signify the stress to be laid upon certain words in a sentence. It is divided by some writers into emphasis of force, which we lay on almost every significant word, and emphasis of sense, which we lay on particular words, to distinguish them from the rest of the sentence.

The importance of emphasis to the right delivery of thoughts in speech must be obvious on the slightest reflection. "Go and ask how old Mrs. Brown is," said a father to his dutiful son. The latter hurried away, and soon returned with the report that Mrs. Brown had replied that "it was none of his business how old she was." The poor man had intended merely to inquire into the state of her health ; but he accidentally put a wrong emphasis on the word old.

Another instance of misapprehension will illustrate the importance of emphasis. A stranger from the country, observing an ordinary roller-rule on a table, took it up, and on asking what it was used for, was answered, "It is a rule for counting-houses." After turning it over and over, up and down, and puzzling his brain for some time, he at last, in a paroxysm of baffled curiosity, exclaimed : "How in the name of wonder do you count houses with this?" If his informer had rightly bestowed his emphasis, the misconception of his meaning would not have taken place.

Emphasis and intonation must be left to the good sense and feeling of the reader. If you thoroughly understand and feel what you have to utter, and have your attention concentrated upon it, you will emphasize better than by attempting to conform your emphasis to any rules or marks dictated by one writer, and perhaps contradicted by another.

A boy at his sports is never at a loss how to make his emphasis expressive. If he have to say to a companion, "I want your bat, not your ball," or "I'm going to skate, not to swim," he will not fail to emphasize and inflect the italicized words aright. And why? Simply because he knows what he means, and attends to it. Let the reader study to know what his reading-lesson means, and he will spend his time more profitably than in pondering over marks and rules of disputed application. It is for the teacher, by his oral example, to instil a realization of this fact into the minds of the young.

Dr. Whately, in his Treatise on Rhetoric, pointedly condemns the artificial system of teaching elocution by marks and rules, as worse than useless. His objections have been disputed, but never answered. They are : first, that the proposed system must necessarily be imperfect ; secondly, that if it were perfect, it would be a circuitous path to the object in view ; and, thirdly, that even if both these objections were removed, the object would not be effectually obtained.

He who not only understands fully what he is reading, but is earnestly occupying his mind with the matter of it, will be likely to read as if he understood it, and thus to make others understand it ; and, in like manner, he who not only feels it, but is exclusively absorbed with that feeling, will be likely to read as if he felt it, and communicate his impression to his hearers.

Exercises in Emphasis.

In their prosperity, my friends shall never hear of me ; in their adversity, always.

There is no possibility of speaking properly the language of any passion without feeling it.

A book that is to be read requires one sort of style ; a man that is to speak, must use another.

A sentiment which, expressed diffusely, will barely be admitted to be just, expressed concisely will be admired as spirited.

Whatever may have been the origin of pastoral poetry, it is undoubtedly a natural and very agreeable form of poetical composition.

A stream that runs within its banks is a beautiful object ; but when it rushes down with the impetuosity and noise of a torrent, it presently becomes a sublime one.

Those who complain of the shortness of life, let it slide by them without wishing to seize and make the most of its golden minutes. The more we do, the more we can do ; the more busy we are, the more leisure we have.

This without those, obtains a vain employ ;
Those without this, but urge us to destroy.

The generous buoyant spirit is a power
Which in the virtuous mind doth all things conquer.
It bears the hero on to arduous deeds ;
It lifts the saint to heaven.

To err is human ; to forgive, divine.

INFLECTION.

WITH regard to the Inflections of the voice, upon which so much has been said and written—there are, in reality, but two—the rising and the falling. The compound, or circumflex inflection, is merely that in which the voice both rises and falls on the same word—as in the utterance of the word “What !” when it is intended to convey an expression of disdain, reproach, or extreme surprise.

The inflections are not termed rising or falling from the high or low tone in which they are pronounced, but from the upward or downward slide in which they terminate, whether pronounced in a high or low key. The rising inflection was marked by Mr. Walker with the acute accent (') ;

the falling, with the grave accent (`). The inflection mark of the acute accent must not be confounded with its use in accentuation.

In the utterance of the interrogative sentence, "Does Cæsar deserve fame' or blame'?" the word fame will have the rising or upward slide of the voice, and blame the falling or downward slide of the voice. Every pause, of whatever kind, must necessarily adopt one of these two inflections, or continue in a monotone.

Thus it will be seen that the rising inflection is that upward turn of the voice which we use in asking a question, answerable by a simple yes or no; and the falling inflection is that downward sliding of the voice which is commonly used in the end of a sentence.

Lest an inaccurate ear should be led to suppose that the different signification of the opposing words is the reason of their sounding differently, we give below, among other examples, some phrases composed of the same words, which are nevertheless pronounced with exactly the same difference of inflection as the others.

EXAMPLES.

The Rising followed by the Falling.

- Does he talk rationally', or irrationally'?
- Does he pronounce correctly', or incorrectly'?
- Does he mean honestly', or dishonestly'?
- Does she dance gracefully', or ungracefully'?

The Falling followed by the Rising.

- He talks rationally', not irrationally'.
- He pronounces correctly', not incorrectly'.
- He means honestly', not dishonestly'.
- She dances gracefully', not ungracefully'.

The rising progression in a sentence connects what has been said with what is to be uttered, or what the speaker wishes to be implied, or supplied by the hearer; and this with more or less closeness, querulousness, and passion, in proportion to the extent and force of the rise.

The falling progression disconnects what has been said from whatever may follow ; and this with more or less completeness, exclusiveness, and passion, in proportion to the force and extent of the fall.

The rising inflection is thus, invariably associated with what is incomplete in sense ; or if apparently complete, dependent on or modified by what follows ; with whatever is relative to something expressed, or to be implied ; and with what is doubtful, interrogative, or supplicatory.

The falling inflection, on the contrary, is invariably associated with what is complete and independent in sense, or intended to be received as such ; with whatever is positive and exclusive ; and with what is confidently assertive, dogmatical, or mandatory.

The rising inflection is thus, also, the natural intonation of all attractive sentiments ; of love, admiration, pity, &c., as in the exclamations, "Beautiful' ! Alas' ! Poor thing' !" The falling inflection is the tone of repulsion, anger, hatred, and reproach, as in the exclamations, "Go' ! Fool' ! Malediction' !"

A great number of rules are given for the inflecting of sentences, or parts of sentences. To these rules there are many exceptions not enumerated by their framers. The rules, if used at all, must therefore be used with extreme caution, or they will mislead ; and the reader who undertakes to regulate his elocution by them will in many instances fall into error. We give below the rules that are least liable to exception ; but even these must be received rather as hints to guide the reader where he is in doubt, than rules to hold where his understanding dictates the intonation most in accordance with the sense and spirit of what he is reading.

Where the sense is complete, whether at the termination of a sentence, or part of a sentence, use the falling inflection.

When sentences are divisible into two parts, the commencing part is generally distinguished by the rising inflection.

Questions commencing with an adverb or pronoun, and which cannot be answered by a simple “yes” or “no,” generally terminate with the falling inflection.

Questions commencing with a verb, and which cannot be answered by a simple “yes” or “no,” generally terminate with the rising inflection.

When two or more questions in succession are separated by the disjunctive particle or, the last question requires the falling and the preceding ones the rising inflection.

The general rule for the parenthesis is, that it must be pronounced in a lower tone, and more rapidly than the rest of the sentence, and concluded with the inflection that immediately precedes it. A simile being a species of parenthesis, follows the same rule.

The title echo is adopted to express a repetition of a word or phrase. The echoing word is pronounced generally with the rising inflection, followed by something of a pause.

EXERCISES IN INFLECTION.

In the following pieces,—the first by Sir Walter Scott, and the second and third from Ossian,—exercises in modulation for two or three voices, or sets of voices, are given. By separating an entire class, and allotting to each group its part for simultaneous utterance, a good effect, with a little drilling, may be produced. Pupils will readily perceive that where the sense is incomplete, and the voice is suspended, the rising inflection is naturally used :

For two voices, or sets of voices.

- (1st) Pibroch* of Donuil Dhu', (2d) pibroch of Donuil',
 (1st) Wake thy wild voice anew, (2d) summon Clan-Conuil'.
 (1st) Come away', come away' ! (2d) hark to the summons' !
 (1st) Come in your war-array', (2d) gentles and commons'.

* A pibroch (pronounced pibroch) is, among the Highlanders, a martial air played with the bagpipe. The measure of the verse in this stanza requires that in the third line the exclamation “Come away” should be sounded as if it were a single word, having the accent on the first syllable—thus, come'away. So in the words hill-plaid, and steel blade, in the seventh and eighth lines. The license of rhyme requires that the ai in plaid should be pronounced long, as in maid.

(1st) Come from deep glen', (2d) and from mountains so rocky',

(1st) The war pipe and pennon (2d) are at Inverlochy' ;

(1st) Come every hill-plaid', (2d) and true heart that wears one',

(1st) Come every steel blade', (2d) and strong hand that bears one'.

(1st) Leave untended the herd, (2d) the flock without shelter' ;

(1st) Leave the corpse uninterred, (2d) the bride at the altar' ;

(1st) Leave the deer, (2d) leave the steer, (1st) leave nets and barges' ;

(All) Come with your fighting gear', broadswords and targes'.

(1st) Come as the winds come, (2d) when forests are rended' ;

(1st) Come as the waves come, (2d) when navies are stranded' ;

(1st) Faster come, faster come, (2d) faster' and faster',

(1st) Chief, (2d) vassal', (1st) page' and groom', (2d) tenant' and master.

(1st) Fast they come', fast they come ; (2d) see how they gather' !

(1st) Wide waves the eagle plume (2d) blended with heather'.

(1st) Cast your plaids, (2d) draw your blades', (All) forward each man set' !

(All) Pibroch of Donuil Dhu', knell for the onset' !

In the last line but one, the two words man set (meaning man set in battle array) should be sounded as a single word of two syllables, having the accent on the first.

For three voices, or sets of voices.

(1st voice) As Autumn's dark storm'—(2d voice) pours from the echoing hills'—(3d voice) echoing hills',— (1st voice) so toward each other'—(2d voice) toward each other approached'—(3d voice) approached the heroes'.

(1st voice) As two dark streams'—(2d voice) dark streams from high rocks'—(3d voice) meet and mix, and roar on the plain',—

(1st voice) loud, rough, and dark'—(2d voice) dark in battle'—(3d voice) in battle met Lochlin and In'nisfall'.

(1st voice) Chief mixed his blows with chief—(2d voice) and man with man'—(3d voice) steel clanging, sounded on steel'.

(1st voice) Helmets are cleft'—(2d voice) cleft on high—(3d voice) Helmets are cleft on high'; blood bursts and smokes around'.

(1st voice) As the troubled noise of the ocean'—(2d voice)
 the ocean when roll the waves on high'; as the last peal of the thunder of heaven'—(3d voice) the thunder of heaven'; such is the noise of battle.

(1st voice) The groan'—(2d voice) the groan of the people'— (3d voice) the groan of the people spreads over the hills'.

(1st voice) It was like—(2d voice) like the thunder'—(3d voice) like the thunder of night'—(All) It was like the thunder of night, when the cloud bursts on Cona', and a thousand ghosts' shriek at once' on the hollow wind'.

(1st voice) The morning'—(2d voice) morning was gay'—
 (3d voice) the morning was gay on Cromla',—

(1st voice) when the sons—(2d voice) sons of the sea'—
 (3d voice) when the sons of the sea ascended'.

(1st voice) Calmar stood forth'—(2d voice) stood forth to meet them',—(3d voice) Calmar stood forth to meet them in the pride of his kindling soul'.

(1st voice) But pale'—(2d voice) pale was the face'—(3d voice) but pale was the face of the chief, as he leaned on his father's spear'.

(1st voice) The lightning—(2d voice) lightning flies'—(3d voice) the lightning flies on wings of fire.

(1st voice) But slowly'—(2d voice) slowly now the hero falls'
 —(3d voice) but slowly now the hero falls', like the tree of hundred roots before the driving storm.

1st voice) Now from the gray mists of the ocean' the white sailed ships of Fingal' * appear'.—(2d voice) High'—(3d voice) high is the grove of their masts' as they nod by turns on the rolling waves'.

1st voice) As ebbs the resounding sea through the hundred isles of Inistore'—(2d voice) so loud'—(3d voice) so vast',—(1st voice) so immense',—(All) returned the sons of Lochlin to meet the approaching foe'.

1st voice) But bending',—(2d voice) weeping',—(3d voice) sad, and slow'—(All) sank Calmar, the mighty chief, in Cromla's lonely wood'.

1st voice) The battle'—(2d voice) battle is past',—(3d voice) "The battle is past," said the chief.

1st voice) Sad is the field'—(2d voice) sad is the field of Lena'!—(3d voice) Mournful are the oaks of Cromla'!

All) The hunters have fallen in their strength! The sons of the brave are no more!

1st voice) As a hundred winds on Morven';—(2d voice) as the stream of a hundred hills';—(3d voice) as clouds successive fly over the face of heaven'; 1st voice) so vast',—(2d voice) so terrible',—(3d voice) so roaring'—

All) the armies mixed on Lena's echoing plain'.

1st voice) The clouds of—(2d voice) night came rolling down';—(3d voice) the stars of the north arise' over the rolling waves': they show their heads of fire through the flying mists of heaven'.

1st voice) "Spread the sail," said the king'—(2d voice) Seize the winds as they pour from Lena'!"—(3d voice) We rose on the waves with songs!

All)—We rushed with joy through the foam of the deep.

The humorous ode by Thomas Hood, addressed to his son,

* Here the acute accent is intended as a mark of accent, not of inflection.

aged three years and five months, contains numerous examples of the parenthesis.

Thou happy, happy elf !
 (But stop !—first let me kiss away that tear) —
 Thou tiny image of myself !
 (My love, he's poking peas into his ear) —
 Thou merry laughing sprite ! with spirits feather light,
 Untouch'd by sorrow, and unsoil'd by sin—
 (Good heavens ! the child is swallowing a pin !)

Thou little tricky Puck
 With antic toys so funnily bestuck,
 Light as the singing-bird that wings the air,
 (The door ! the door ! he'll tumble down the stair !)
 Thou darling of thy sire !
 (Why, Jane, he'll set his pinafore afire !)
 Thou imp of mirth and joy !
 In love's dear chain so strong and bright a link,
 Thou idol of thy parents—(Drat the boy !
 There goes my ink !)

Thou cherub—but of earth !
 Fit playfellow for fays by moonlight pale,
 In harmless sport and mirth,
 (The dog will bite him if he pulls its tail !)
 Thou human humming-bee, extracting honey
 From every blossom in the world that blows,
 Singing in youth's Elysium ever sunny,
 (Another tumble—that's his precious nose !)
 Thy father's pride and hope !
 (He'll break the mirror with that skipping-rope !)
 With pure heart newly stamp'd from nature's mint,
 (Where did he learn that squint !)

Toss the light ball—bestride the stick,
 (I knew so many cakes would make him sick !)
 With fancies buoyant as the thistle down,
 Prompting the face grotesque, and antic brisk,

With many a lamb-like frisk,
 (He's got the scissors, snipping at your gown !)
 Fresh as the morn, and brilliant as its star,
 (I wish that window had an iron bar !)
 Bold as the hawk, yet gentle as the dove—
 (I'll tell you what, my love,
 I cannot write unless he's sent above !)

EXERCISES IN ELOCUTION.

Spirited Declamation.

"He woke to hear his sentry's shriek—
 'To arms ! They come ! The Greek ! the Greek.'"

"Strike—till the last arm'd foe expires ;
 Strike—for your altars and your fires ;
 Strike—for the green graves of your sires,
 God, and your native land."

"Shout, Tyranny, shout,
 Through your dungeons and palaces, 'Freedom is o'er.'"

"On, ye brave,
 Who rush to glory, or the grave !
 Wave, Munich, all thy banners wave !
 And charge with all thy chivalry !"

"Now for the fight—now for the cannon peal !
 Forward—through blood, and toil, and cloud, and fire !
 On, then, hussars ! Now give them rein and heel !
 Think of the orphan child, the murdered sire.
 Earth cries for blood. In thunder on them wheel,
 This hour to Europe's fate shall set the triumph seal."

Gay, Brisk, and Humorous Description.

"Last came Jyo's estatic trial,
 He, with viny crown advancing,
 First to the lively pipe his hand address'd ;
 But soon he saw the brisk, awakening viol,
 Whose sweet, entrancing sound he loved the best."

"I come, I come !—Ye have call'd me long,
I come o'er the mountains with light and song.
Ye may trace my step o'er the wakening earth,
By the winds which tell of the violet's birth."

"Then I see Queen Mab hath been with you.

————— She comes,

In shape no bigger than an agate stone

On the forefinger of an alderman,

Drawn by a team of little atomies

Athwart men's noses, as they lie asleep ;

Her wagon-spokes made of long spinners' legs ;

The cover, of the wings of grasshoppers ;

The traces, of the smallest spider's web ;

The collars, of the moonshine's watery beams,

Her whip, of cricket's bone ; the lash, of film ;

Her wagoner, a small, gray-coated gnat,

Her chariot is an empty hazel-nut,

Made by the joiner squirrel, or old grub,

Time out of mind the fairies' coachmakers.

And in this state she gallops, night by night.

Sometimes she gallops o'er a courtier's nose,

And then dreams he of smelling out a suit ;

And sometimes comes she with a tithe-pig's tail,

Tickling a parson's nose as he lies asleep ;

Then dreams he of another benefice.

Sometimes she driveth o'er a soldier's neck ;

And then dreams he of cutting foreign throats,

Of breaches, ambuscadoes, Spanish blades,

Of healths five fathom deep ; and then anon

Drums in his ear ; at which he starts and wakes,

And, being thus frighten'd, mutters a prayer or two,

And sleeps again."

Unimpassioned Narrative.

"There was a man in the land of Uz, whose name was Job, and that man was perfect and upright, and one that feared God and eschewed evil."

Dignified Sentiments.

"Sir, in the most express terms, I deny the competency of parliament to do this act. I warn you, do not dare to lay our hands on the constitution. I tell you that if, circumstanced as you are, you pass this act, it will be a nullity, and no man in Ireland will be bound to obey it. I make the assertion deliberately. I repeat it, and call on any man who dares me to take down my words. You have not been elected for this purpose. You are appointed to make laws, not legislatures."

Solemn and Impressive Thoughts.

"It must be so :—Plato, thou reasonest well,
 Else whence this pleasing hope, this fond desire,
 This longing after immortality?
 Or whence this secret dread, and inward horror,
 Of falling into naught? Why shrinks the soul
 Back on herself, and startles at destruction?
 'Tis the divinity that stirs within us,
 'Tis Heaven itself that points out an hereafter,
 And intimates eternity to man.
 Eternity! thou pleasing, dreadful thought!
 Through what variety of untried being,
 Through what new scenes and changes must we pass!
 The wide, the unbounded prospect lies before me;
 But shadows, clouds, and darkness, rest upon it."

Awe and Solemnity.

"To be, or not to be, that is the question:
 Whether 'tis nobler in the mind to suffer
 The slings and arrows of outrageous fortune,
 Or to take arms against a sea of troubles,
 And, by opposing, end them? To die,—to sleep;
 No more;—and, by a sleep, to say we end
 The heart-ache, and the thousand natural shocks
 That flesh is heir to;—'tis a consummation
 Devoutly to be wished. To die;—to sleep;—
 To sleep! perchance to dream; ay, there's the rub;

For in that sleep of death, what dreams may come,
When we have shuffled off this mortal coil,
Must give us pause."

Deep Solemnity, Awe, Consternation.

"In thoughts from the visions of the night, when deep sleep falleth on men, fear came upon me, and trembling, which made all my bones to shake. Then a spirit passed before my face. The hair of my flesh stood up. It stood still, but I could not discern the form thereof. An image was before mine eyes. There was silence, and I heard a voice: 'Shall mortal man be more just than God?'"

Besides practising the examples as they are arranged on the preceding pages, they should be so varied as to require a sudden transition of the voice from one extreme of intervals to another. By this practice, the pupil may at any time, by determining the depth and grade of feeling, strike the appropriate note with as much precision as the vocalist can, when executing any note of the scale.

The elements of impassioned utterance are many and various; and although each one must be considered in an insulated light, yet no one of them is ever heard alone; no one even exists separately in correct and varied speech. They are always applied in combination, and several are sometimes combined in a single act of utterance. We may have under one syllabic impulse, a long quantity, a wide interval, aspiration, and some one of the modes of stress, all simultaneously effecting a particular purpose of expression.

As the sister Graces produce the most pleasing effect when arranged in one family group, so an impassioned sentiment may be most deeply and vividly impressed by the combination of several vocal elements. This might be clearly illustrated in cases of deep and overwhelming emotions, where the most tone will be found one of the essential constituents, combined with long quantity, the lowest and deepest notes, slow movement, and partially suppressed force, in expressing this condition of the soul.

MONOTONE.

The monotone may be defined as that inflexible movement of the voice which is heard when fear, vastness of thought, force, majesty, power, or the intensity of feeling, is such as partially to obstruct the powers of utterance.

This movement of the voice may be accounted for by the fact that, when the excitement is so powerful, and the kind and degree of feeling are such as to agitate the whole frame, the vocal organs will be so affected, and their natural functions so controlled, that they can give utterance to the thought or sentiment only on one note, iterated on the same unvarying line of pitch.

Grandeur of thought, and sublimity of feeling are always expressed by this movement. The effect produced by it is deep and impressive. When its use is known, and the rule for its application is clearly understood, the reading will be characterized by a solemnity of manner, a grandeur of refinement, and a beauty of execution, which all will acknowledge to be in exact accordance with the dictates of Nature, and strictly within the pale of her laws. This will clearly be exemplified in reading the following extracts :

“Vital spark of heavenly flame,
Quit, oh, quit this mortal frame !
Trembling, hoping, lingering, flying—
Oh, the pain, the bliss of dying !
Cease, fond nature, cease thy strife,
And let me languish into life.

“Hark ! they whisper ; angels say,
‘Sister spirit, come away.’
What is this absorbs me quite,
Steals my senses, shuts my sight,
Drowns my spirit, draws my breath?
Tell me, my soul, can this be death?”

If the reader utter the thoughts and sentiments, in the last stanza of the above extract, with a just degree of impressiveness, he will appear as if he actually heard, saw, and felt, what the poet described the Christian as hearing, seeing, and feeling. What constituent in vocal intonation, or what element in expression, enables the reader to give force and true coloring to the thoughts and sentiments in the passage just cited? In what way can it be explained and made clear to the understanding?

The above extract, it will seem, is descriptive of a state of inconceivable solemnity, and expressive of the deepest feelings, the most solemn thoughts, and the most profound emotions; and the natural expression of such feelings, thoughts, and emotions, requires the monotone.

Why not, then, lay it down as a principle, that passages expressive of similar sentiments are to be read in a similar manner?

If any one fail to see and acknowledge the effect of the monotone in reading the above extract, let him read it again in the key of the monotone, and then without it; and if the difference in the effect be not very perceptible, let it be read to him, first on the key of the monotone, and then with the same stress, tone, quantity, inflection, and rate of movement that would be appropriate in reading the following extract from Prior:

“Interr’d beneath the marble stone
Lies sauntering Jack and idle Joan.
While rolling threescore years and one
Did round this globe their courses run,
If human things went ill or well,
If changing empires rose or fell,
The morning pass’d, the evening came
And found this couple still the same.
They walk’d, and ate, good folks:—What then?
Why then they walk’d and ate again.
They soundly slept the night away;
They did just nothing all the day:
Nor good, nor bad, nor fools, nor wise,
They would not learn, nor could advise.

Without love, hatred, joy, or fear,
They led—a kind of—as it were ;
Nor wish'd, nor cared, nor laugh'd, nor cried ;
And so they lived, and so they died."

If this measure leave him in doubt, if he then do not see how the monotone may be employed with effect, further efforts will be of no avail. He may be considered as belonging to that "kind of—as it were" class of individuals, who have not the ability either to note faults and detect blemishes, or to define beauties and enumerate graces.

The force and beauty of the monotone may be further exemplified in the reading of some portions of the following extracts :

"The bright sun was extinguish'd, and the stars
Did wander darkling in the eternal space,
Rayless and pathless ; and the icy earth
Swung blind and blackening in the moonless air."

"Eternity ! thou pleasing dreadful thought !
Through what variety of untried being,
Through what new scenes and changes, must we pass !
The wide, the unbounded prospect lies before me ;
But shadows, clouds, and darkness rest upon it."

"Departed spirits of the mighty dead !
Ye that at Marathon and Leuctra bled !
Friends of the world ! restore your swords to man, Fight in his sacred cause, and lead the van."

"In the beginning, God created the heavens and the earth. And the earth was without form and void ; and darkness was upon the face of the deep : and the Spirit of God moved upon the face of the waters. And God said, 'Let there be light,' and there was light."

Q U A N T I T Y .

QUANTITY consists in the extended time of utterance, without changing the standard pronunciation of words. It is produced by a well-marked radical, a full volume of sound, and a clear lessening vanish. When it is well executed, the syllable will be kept free from a vapid, lifeless drawl.

The power of giving a gracefully extended quantity to syllables is not common. The principal source of difference between a good reader and a bad one lies in their varied degrees of ability in this respect.

Although writers on elocution seem, in a measure, to have overlooked quantity as an important element of expression, still it is one of the most important which a distinguished speaker employs in giving utterance to the sentiments of sublimity, dignity, deliberation, or doubt.

When judiciously applied and skilfully executed, it seems to spread a hue of feeling over the whole sentence. It gives that masterly finish, and that fine, delicate touch to the expression, which never fails to impress the deepest feeling, or to excite the most sweet and enchanting emotions.

A well-marked stress, and a gracefully extended time, form the basis of the most important properties of the voice such as gravity, depth of tone, volume, fulness of sound, smoothness, sweetness, and strength. If the mind were a pure intellect, without fancy, taste, or passion, the above-named function of the voice, which may properly enough be termed the signature of expression, would be uncalled for. But the case is widely different. The impassioned speaker, overpowered by his subject, and at a loss to find words to express the strength of his feelings, naturally holds on to and prolongs the tones of utterance, and thereby supplies any deficiency in the words themselves.

EXAMPLES IN QUANTITY.

“With woful measures, wan Despair—
Low, sullen sounds his grief beguiled ;

A solemn, strange, and mingled air ;
 'Twas sad by fits ; by starts 'twas mild."

"Thou art, O God ! the life and light
 Of all this wondrous world we see ;
 Its glow by day, its smile by night,
 Are but reflections caught from thee.
 Where'er we turn, thy glories shine,
 And all things bright and fair are thine."

"Spirit of Freedom ! when on Phyle's brow
 Thou sat'st with Thrasybulus and his train,
 Couldst thou forebode the dismal hour that now
 Dims the green beauty of thine Attic plain?"

"The stars shall fade away, the sun himself
 Grow dim with age, and nature sink in years,
 But thou shalt flourish in immortal youth
 Unhurt, amidst the war of elements,
 The wreck of matter, and the crush of worlds."

It is apparent that one predominating sentiment pervades the whole of the above extracts. They are of a solemn, sublime, and dignified description ; and a gracefully extended quantity diffused over the whole with evenness and continuity, will bring out the sentiment in the most impressive manner.

Quantity is employed in giving utterance to feelings of malignity and emotions of hatred ; also in cases of irony, and in those of affected mawkish sentimentality, and when so managed that the clear lessening vanish shall blend with the full opening of the succeeding word, it will give a fine effect to that morbid sensitiveness which exaggerates every feeling.

"That lull'd them as the north wind does the sea."

"And do you now put on your best attire ?
 And do you now cull out a holiday ?
 And do you now strew flowers in his way,
 That comes in triumph over Pompey's blood ?"

"The languid lady next appears in state,
 Who was not born to carry her own weight ;

She lolls, reels, staggers, till some foreign aid
 To her own stature lifts the feeble maid.
 Then, if ordain'd to so severe a doom,
 She, by just stages, journeys round the room ;
 But, knowing her own weakness, she despairs
 To scale the Alps—that is, ascend the stairs.
 ‘My fan!’ let others say, who laugh at toil ;
 ‘Fan!’ ‘Hood!’ ‘Glove!’ ‘Scarf!’ is her laconic style,
 And that is spoke with such a dying fall,
 That Betty rather sees than hears the call ;
 The motion of her lips, and meaning eye,
 Piece out the idea her faint words deny.
 Oh, listen with attention most profound !
 Her voice is but the shadow of a sound.
 And help ! oh, help ! her spirits are so dead
 One hand scarce lifts the other to her head.
 If, there, a stubborn pin it triumph’s o’er,
 She pants ! she sinks away ! she is no more !
 Let the robust, and the gigantic carve ;
 Life is not worth so much ; she’d rather starve,
 But chew, she must herself. Ah ! cruel fate
 That Rosalinda can’t by proxy eat.”

POPE.

RATE OR MOVEMENT OF THE VOICE.

The term rate or movement of the voice has reference to the rapidity or slowness of utterance. In good reading, the voice must be adapted to the varying indication of the sentiments in the individual words, and the rate must accommodate itself to the prevailing sentiment which runs through the whole paragraph.

Every one must perceive that the rate of the voice, in the utterance of humorous sentiments and in facetious description, is vastly different from that which is appropriate on occasions of solemn invocation.

The rates of movement which are clearly distinguishable in varied sentiment, may be denoted by the terms slow, moderate, lively, brisk, and rapid.

SLOW MOVEMENT.

Slow movement is exemplified in the expression of the deepest emotions ; such as awe, profound reverence, melancholy, grandeur, vastness, and all similar sentiments.

In exercising the voice on the rates of movement, the examples illustrating the extremes should be read consecutively, for reasons which must be obvious to the teacher.

As several constituents of expression are frequently blended, especially in the utterance of dignified and impressive sentiments, it may not be amiss to take the same example, to illustrate the separate functions of the voice. Thus the passage from the book of Job, which we have already used to exemplify the principles in pitch and monotone, may serve to illustrate the lowest and deepest notes, long quantity and slow movement, because all these are blended in giving force and true expression to the sentiment.

Reverence.

“Thy awe-imposing voice is heard—we hear it !
The Almighty’s fearful voice ! Attend !
It breaks the silence and in solemn warning speaks.”

Melancholy.

“With eyes upraised, as one inspired,
Pale Melancholy sat retired,
And from her wild sequestered seat,
In notes by distance made more sweet,
Pour’d through the mellow hour her pensive soul.”

“The hills,
Rock-ribb’d and ancient as the sun,—the vales,
Stretching in pensive quietness between,—
The venerable woods,—rivers that move
In majesty,—and the complaining brooks,
That make the meadows green,—and, pour’d round all,
Old ocean’s gray and melancholy waste,—
Are but the solemn decorations all
Of the great tomb of man.’

Profound Solemnity.

“Leaves have their time to fall,
 And flowers to wither at the north wind’s breath,
 And stars to set—but all,
 Thou hast all seasons for thine own, O Death !

Grandeur—Vastness.

“Roll on, thou deep and dark blue ocean, roll !
 Ten thousand fleets sweep over thee in vain. . . .
 “Thou glorious mirror, where the Almighty’s form
 Glasses itself in tempests ; in all time,
 Calm or convulsed—in breeze, or gale, or storm,—
 Icing the pole, or in the torrid clime
 Dark heaving,—boundless, endless, as sublime,—
 The image of Eternity, the throne
 Of the Invisible,—even from out thy slime
 The monsters of the deep are made. Each zone
 Obeys thee. Thou goest forth, dread, fathomless, alone.”

MODERATE MOVEMENT.

Moderate movement is the usual rate of utterance in ordinary, unimpassioned narration, as in the following extract—

“Stranger, if thou hast learn’d a truth which needs
 Experience more than reason,—that the world
 Is full of guilt and misery,—and hast known
 Enough of all its crimes and cares
 To tire thee of it,—enter this wild wood,
 And view the haunts of Nature.”

LIVELY MOVEMENT.

This rate of the voice is exemplified in giving utterance to a moderate degree of joyful and vivid emotions, as in the following extracts :

“Now, my co-mates and brothers in exile,
 Hath not old custom made this life more sweet
 Than that of painted pomp ? Are not these woods

More free from peril than the envious court?
 Here feel we but the penalty of Adam,—
 The seasons' difference, as, the icy fang
 And churlish chiding of the wintry wind,
 Which, when it bites and blows upon my body,
 Even till I shrink with cold, I smile and say,
 'This is no flattery.' These are counsellors
 That feelingly persuade me what I am.
 Sweet are the uses of adversity,
 Which, like the toad, ugly and venomous,
 Wears yet a precious jewel in his head;
 And this our life, exempt from public haunt,
 Finds tongues in trees, books in the running brooks,
 Sermons in stones, and good in every thing:
 I would not change it.

BRISK MOVEMENT.

This rate of the voice is employed in giving utterance to gay, sprightly, humorous, and exhilarating emotions; as in the following examples:

"But, oh! how alter'd was its sprightlier tone,
 When Cheerfulness, a nymph of healthiest hue,
 Her bow across her shoulder flung,
 Her buskins gemm'd with morning dew,
 Blew an inspiring air, that dale and thicket rung
 The hunter's call, to Faun and Dryad known!"

"Last came Joy's estatic trial,
 He, with viny crown advancing
 First to the lively pipe his hand address'd;
 But soon he saw the brisk, awakening viol,
 Whose sweet, entrancing voice he loved the best."

"I come, I come!—ye have call'd me long;—
 I come o'er the mountain with light and song,
 Ye may trace my step o'er the wakening earth
 By the winds which tell of the violet's birth,
 By the primrose stars in the shadowy grass,
 By the green leaves opening as I pass."

“Joy, joy ! forever, my task is done,
The gates are pass’d and heaven is won.”

RAPID MOVEMENT.

This movement of the voice is the symbol of violent anger, confusion, alarm, fear, hurry, and is generally employed in giving utterance to those incoherent expressions which are thrown out when the mind is in a state of perturbation ; as may be exemplified in parts of the following extracts :

“Next Anger rush’d. His eyes, on fire,
In lightning owned his secret stings ;
In one rude clash he struck the lyre,
And swept with hurried hands the strings.”

“When, doff’d his casque, he felt free air
Around ’gan Marmion wildly stare :
‘Where’s Harry Blount ? Fitz-Eustace, where ?
Linger ye here, ye hearts of hare !
Redeem my pennon—charge again !
Cry, “Marmion, to the rescue !”—Vain !
Last of my race, on battle-plain
That shout shall ne’er be heard again !
Yet my last thought is England’s. Fly,
Fitz-Eustace, to Lord Surrey hie.
Tunstall lies dead upon the field ;
His life-blood stains the spotless shield ;
Edmund is down—my life is reft—
The admiral alone is left.
Let Stanley charge, with spur of fire,
With Chester charge, and Lancashire,
Full upon Scotland’s central host,
Or victory and England’s lost.
Must I bid twice ? Hence, varlets ! fly,
Leave Marmion here alone—to die.’”

“He woke—to hear his sentry’s shriek—
‘To arms ! They come ! The Greek ! the Greek !’
He woke—to die ’midst flame and smoke,

And shout, and groan, and sabre stroke,
 And death-shots falling thick and fast,
 As lightnings from the mountain cloud,
 And heard, with voice as trumpet loud,
 Bozzaris cheer his band ;—
 ‘Strike—till the last arm’d-foe expires !
 Strike—for your altars and your fires !
 Strike—for the green graves of your sires,
 God, and your native land’ ”

“Back to thy punishment,
 False fugitive ! and to thy speed add wings ;
 Lest, with a whip of scorpions, I pursue
 Thy lingerings, or with one stroke of this dart,
 Strange horror seize thee, and pangs unfelt before !”

“This day’s the birth of sorrows ! This hour’s work
 Will breed proscriptions. Look to your hearths, my lords,
 For there henceforth shall sit, for household gods,
 Shapes hot from Tartarus !—all shames and crimes :
 Wan Treachery, with his thirsty dagger drawn ;
 Suspicion, poisoning his brother’s cup ;
 Naked Rebellion, with the torch and axe,
 Making his wild sport of your blazing thrones,
 ’Till Anarchy comes down on you like Night,
 And Massacre seals Rome’s eternal grave.”

SEMITONE.

(Plaintiveness of speech, or the semitonic movement.)

In ascending the musical scale, if the tone of the voice, in moving from the seventh space to the eighth, be compared to the utterance of a plaintive sentiment, their identity will be perceived. The interval from the seventh to the eighth is a semitone.

Every one knows a plaintive utterance, and the pupil may at any time discriminate a semitone, and hit its interval by affecting a plaintive expression.

Subjects of pathos and tenderness, uttered on any pitch, high or low, are capable of being sounded with this marked plaintiveness of character. Let the pupil devote much time to this subject. He must acquire the power of transferring its plaintiveness to any interval, in order to give a just coloring to expressions which call for its use.

This movement of the voice is a very frequent element in expression, and performs high offices in speech. It is used in expressions of grief, pity, and supplication. It is the natural and unstudied language of sorrow, contrition, condolence, commiseration, tenderness, compassion, mercy, fondness, vexation, chagrin, impatience, fatigue, pain, with all the shades of difference which may exist between them. It is appropriate in the treatment of all subjects which appeal to human sympathy.

When the semitone is united with quantity and tremor, the force of the expression is greatly increased. The tremulous semitonic movement may be used on a single word, the more emphatically to mark its plaintiveness of character ; or it may be used in continuation through a whole sentence, when the speaker, in the ardor of distressful and tender supplication, would give utterance to the intensity of his feelings.

EXAMPLES IN PLAINTIVE UTTERANCE.

“My mother ! when I heard that thou wast dead,
Say, wast thou conscious of the tears I shed?
Hover'd thy spirit o'er thy sorrowing son,
Wretch even then, life's journey just begun?
I heard the bell toll on thy burial day ;
I saw the hearse that bore thee slow away ;
And, turning from my nursery window, drew
A long, long sigh, and wept a last adieu.
But was it such ? . It was. Where thou art gone,
Adieus and farewells are a sound unknown.”

“Would I had never trod this English earth,
Or felt the flatteries that grow upon it.
Ye have angels' faces, but Heaven knows your hearts,—
I am the most unhappy woman living.”

“MOURNFULLY ! Oh, mournfully
This midnight wind doth sigh,
Like some sweet, plaintive melody,
Of ages long gone by !
It speaks a tale of other years—
Of hopes that bloom’d to die—
Of sunny smiles that set in tears,
And loves that mouldering lie !

“Mournfully ! Oh, mournfully
This midnight wind doth moan !
It stirs some chord or memory
In each dull, heavy tone ;
The voices of the much-loved dead
Seem floating thereupon—
All, all my fond heart cherish’d
Ere death hath made it lone.”

MOTHERWELL.

“WELL knows the fair and friendly moon
The band that Marion leads—
The glitter of their rifles,
The scampering of their steeds.
’Tis life our fiery barbs to guide
Across the moonlight plains ;
’Tis life to feel the night-wind
That lifts their tossing manes.
A moment in the British camp—
A moment—and away,
Back to the pathless forest,
Before the peep of day.

“Grave men there are by broad Santee,
Grave men with hoary hairs,
Their hearts are all with Marion,
For Marion are their prayers.
And lovely ladies greet our band,
With kindest welcoming,
With smiles like those of summer,
And tears like those of spring.

For them we wear these trusty arms,
And lay them down no more
Till we have driven the Briton
Forever from our shore."

BRYANT.

ALAS ! for the rarity
Of Christian charity
Under the sun !
Oh ! it was pitiful !
Near a whole city full,
Home she had none.

Sisterly, brotherly,
Fatherly, motherly,
Feelings had changed :
Love, by harsh evidence,
Thrown from its eminence :
Even God's providence
Seeming estranged.

Where the lamps quiver
So far in the river,
With many a light,
From window and casement,
From garret to basement,
She stood with amazement,
Houseless by night.

The bleak winds of March
Made her tremble and shiver ;
But not the dark arch,
Or the black flowing river :
Mad from life's history,
Glad to death's mystery
Swift to be hurl'd—
Anywhere, anywhere,
Out of the world !

T. HOOD.

THE PAST

How wild and dim this life appears !
 One long, deep, heavy sigh,
 When o'er our eyes, half closed in tears,
 The images of former years
 Are faintly glittering by !
 And still forgotten while they go !
 As on the sea-beach, wave on wave,
 Dissolves at once in snow,
 The amber clouds one moment lie,
 Then, like a dream, are gone !
 Though beautiful the moonbeams play
 On the lake's bosom, bright as they,
 And the soul intensely loves their stay,
 Soon as the radiance melts away,
 We scarce believe it shone !
 Heaven-airs amid the harp-strings dwell,
 And we wish they ne'er may fade—
 They cease—and the soul is a silent cell,
 Where music never play'd !
 Dreams follow dreams, thro' the long night-hours,
 Each lovelier than the last ;
 But, ere the breath of morning-flowers,
 That gorgeous world flies past ;
 And many a sweet angelic cheek,
 Whose smiles of fond affection speak,
 Glides by us on this earth ;
 While in a day we cannot tell
 Where shone the face we loved so well
 In sadness, or in mirth !

WILSON.

WHERE ARE THE DEAD ?

WHERE are the mighty ones of ages past,
 Who o'er the world their inspiration cast,—
 Whose memories stir our spirits like a blast ?
 Where are the dead ?

Where are old empire's sinews snapp'd and gone?
Where is the Persian? Mede? Assyrian?
Where are the kings of Egypt? Babylon?
Where are the dead?

Where are the mighty ones of Greece? Where be
The men of Sparta and Thermopylæ?
The conquering Macedonian, where is he?
Where are the dead?

THE CHARGE OF THE SIX HUNDRED.

HALF a league, half a league,
Half a league onward,
All in the valley of Death,
Rode the six hundred.
"Forward, the Light Brigade!"
"Charge for the guns!" he said:
Into the valley of Death
Rode the six hundred.

"Forward, the Light-Brigade!"
 Was there a man dismay'd?
 Not though the soldier knew
 Some one had blunder'd!
 Flash'd all their sabres bare,
 Flash'd as they turn'd in air,
 Sabring the gunners there,
 Charging an army, while
 All the world wonder'd:
 Plunged in the battery smoke,
 Right through the line they broke;
 Cossack and Russian
 Reel'd from the sabre-stroke
 Shatter'd and sunder'd.
 Then they rode back, but not—
 Not the six hundred.

TENNYSON

GIVE ME THREE GRAINS OF CORN.

GIVE me three grains of corn, mother,
Only three grains of corn,
It will keep the little life I have,
Till the coming of the morn.
I am dying of hunger and cold, mother,
Dying of hunger and cold,
And half the agony of such a death
My lips have never told.

THE LEAVES.

THE leaves are dropping, dropping,
And I watch them as they go ;
Now whirling, floating, stopping,
With a look of noiseless woe.
Yes, I watch them in their falling,
As they tremble from the stem,
With a stillness so appalling—
And my heart goes down with them !

Yes, I see them floating round me
'Mid the beating of the rain,
Like the hopes that still have bound me,
To the fading past again.
They are floating through the stillness,
They are given to the storm—
And they tremble off like phantoms
Of a joy that has no form.

A. S. STEPHENS.

HE is gone on the mountain, he is lost to the forest,
Like a summer-dried fountain, when our need was the sorest ;
The fount, reappearing, from the rain-drops shall borrow,
But to us comes no cheering, to Duncan no morrow !
The hand of the reaper takes the ears that are hoary,
But the voice of the weeper wails manhood in glory :

The autumn winds rushing waft the leaves that are serest,
 But our flower was in flushing when blighting was nearest.
 Fleet foot on the correi, sage counsel in cumber,
 Red hand in the foray, how sound is thy slumber!
 Like the dew on the mountain, like the foam on the river,
 Like the bubble on the fountain, thou art gone, and forever!

SCOTT.

THE FIRST CRUSADERS BEFORE JERUSALEM.

"JERUSALEM! Jerusalem!" The blessed goal was won:
 On Siloe's brook and Sion's mount, as stream'd the setting sun,
 Uplighted in his mellow'd glow, far o'er Judea's plain,
 Slow winding toward the holy walls, appear'd a banner'd train.

Forgot were want, disease, and death, by that impassion'd throng,
 The weary leapt, the sad rejoiced, the wounded knight grew strong;
 One glance at holy Calvary outguerdon'd every pang,
 And loud from thrice ten thousand tongues the glad hosannas rang.

But yet—and at that galling thought, each brow was bent in gloom—
 The cursed badge of Mahomet sway'd o'er the Saviour's tomb:
 Then from unnumber'd sheaths at once, the beaming blades
 upstream'd,
 Vow'd scabbardless till waved the cross above that tomb
 redeem'd.

But suddenly a holy awe the vengeful clamor still'd,
 As sinks the storm before His breath, whose word its rising will'd;
 For conscience whisper'd, the same soil where they so proudly stood,
 The Son of Man had trod abased, and wash'd with tears and blood.

Then dropp'd the squire his master's shield, the serf dash'd down his bow,
 And, side by side with priest and peer, bent reverently and low,
 While sunk at once each pennon'd spear, plumed helm and flashing glaive,
 Like some wide waste of reeds bow'd down by Nilus' swollen wave.

LAMENT-FOR THE DEATH OF OWEN ROE O'NEILL.

THOUGH it break my heart to hear, say again the bitter words,
 'From Derry against Cromwell he march'd to measure swords ;
 But the weapon of the Saxon, met him on his way,
 And he died at Lough Oughter, upon St. Leonard's day !'

Wail, wail ye for the mighty one ! wail, wail ye for the dead !
 Quench the hearth and hold the breath—with ashes strew
 the head.

How tenderly we loved him ! how deeply we deplore !
 But to think—but to think, we shall never see him more !

Sagest in the council was he, kindest in the hall,
 Sure we never won a battle—'twas Owen won them all.
 Had he lived—had he lived—our dear country had been free ;
 But he's dead—but he's dead—and 'tis slaves we'll ever be.

Wail, wail him through the Island ! Weep, weep for our pride !

Would that on the battle-field our gallant chief had died !
 Weep the Victor of Benburb—weep him, young man and old ;
 Weep for him, ye women—your Beautiful lies cold !

We thought you would not die—we were sure you would not go,

And leave us in our utmost need to Cromwell's cruel blow—
 Sheep without a shepherd, when the snow shuts out the sky—
 Oh ! why did you leave us, Owen ? Why did you die ?

Soft as woman's was your voice, O'Neill ! bright was your eye,
Oh ! why did you leave us, Owen ? why did you die ?
Your troubles are all over, you're at rest with God on high ;
But we're slaves, and we're orphans, Owen !—why did you die ?

THOMAS DAVIS.

THE WEXFORD MASSACRE.

THEY knelt around the Cross divine,
The matron and the maid—
They bow'd before redemption's sign
And fervently they pray'd—
Three hundred fair and helpless ones,
Whose crime was this alone—
Their valiant husbands, sires, and sons,
Had battled for their own.

Had battled bravely, but in vain—
The Saxon won the fight ;
And Irish corpses strew'd the plain
Where Valor slept with Right.
And now that man of demon guilt
To fated Wexford flew—
The red blood reeking on his hilt,
Of hearts to Erin true !

He found them there—the young, the old—
The maiden and the wife ;
Their guardians brave, in death were cold,
Who dared for them the strife—
They pray'd for mercy. God on high !
Before Thy cross they pray'd,
And ruthless Cromwell bade them die
To glut the Saxon blade.

Three hundred fell—the stifled prayer
Was quench'd in woman's blood ;
Nor youth nor age could move to spare
From slaughter's crimson flood.

But nations keep a stern account
Of deeds that tyrants do ;
And guiltless blood to Heaven will mount,
And Heaven avenge it, too !

M. J. BARRY.

ABOU BEN ADHEM.

ABOU BEN ADHEM (may his tribe increase) !
Awoke one night from a deep dream of peace,
And saw with the moonlight in his room,
Making it rich, and like a lily in bloom,
An angel, writing in a book of gold ;
Exceeding peace had made Ben Adhem bold ;
And to the presence in the room he said,
"What writest thou ?" The vision raised his head,
And, with a look made all of sweet accord,
Answer'd, "The names of those who love the Lord."
"And is mine one ?" said Abou. "Nay, not so,"
Replied the angel. Abou spoke more low,
But cheerily still ; and said, "I pray thee, then,
Write me as one that loves his fellow-men."
The angel wrote and vanish'd. The next night
It came again with great awakening light,
And show'd the names whom love of God had bless'd,
And lo ! Ben Adhem's name led all the rest.

LEIGH HUNT.

THERE is a reaper, whose name is Death,
And, with his sickle keen,
He reaps the bearded grain at a breath,
And the flowers that grow between.

"Shall I have nought that is fair ?" saith he ;
"Have nought but the bearded grain ?
Though the breath of these flowers is sweet to me,
I will give them all back again."

He gazed at the flowers with tearful eyes,
He kiss'd their drooping leaves ;

It was for the Lord of Paradise
He bound them in his sheaves.

"My Lord has need of these flowerets gay,"
The reaper said, and smiled ;
"Dear tokens of the earth are they,
Where he was once a child.

"They all shall bloom in fields of light,
Transplanted by my care,
And saints, upon their garments white,
These sacred blossoms wear."

Oh, not in cruelty, not in wrath,
The reaper came that day ;
'T was an angel visited the earth,
And took the flowers away. LONGFELLOW.

MENTAL BEAUTY.

THE shape alone let others prize,
The features of the fair,
I look for spirit in her eyes,
And meaning in her air.

A damask cheek, an ivory arm,
Shall ne'er my wishes win ;
Give me an animated form,
That speaks a mind within.

A face where lawful honor shines,
Where sense and sweetness move,
And angel innocence refines
The tenderness of love.

These are the soul of Beauty's frame,
Without whose vital aid,
Unfinish'd all her features seem,
And all her roses dead. ANENSIDE.

THE SOLILOQUY OF KING RICHARD III.

GIVE me another horse :—bind up my wounds :—
 Have mercy, Jesu :—soft : I did but dream ?—
 O coward conscience, how dost thou afflict me !
 The lights burn blue. It is now dead midnight.
 What do I fear ? Myself ? There's none else by.
 Richard loves Richard ; that is, I am I.
 Is there a murderer here ? No : yes ; I am.
 Then fly. What ? From myself ? Great reason ; why ?
 Lest I revenge. What ? Myself on myself ?
 I love myself. Wherefore ? For any good
 That I myself have done unto myself ?
 Oh, no ; alas ! I rather hate myself,
 For hateful deeds committed by myself.
 I am a villain : yet I lie ; I am not.
 Fool, of thyself speak well :—fool, do not flatter :—
 My conscience hath a thousand several tongues ;
 And every tongue brings in a several tale ;
 And every tale condemns me for a villain.
 Perjury, perjury, in the highest degree,
 Murder, stern murder, in the direst degree,
 Throng to the bar, crying all, Guilty ! guilty !
 I shall despair.—There is no creature loves me,
 And, if I die, no soul will pity me :
 Nay, wherefore should they ; since that I myself
 Find in myself no pity to myself ?—
 Methought the souls of all that I had murdered
 Came to my tent, and every one did threat
 To-morrow's vengeance on the head of Richard.

SHAKSPEARE.

SPRING FLOWERS.

WHILE the trees are leafless,
 While the fields are bare,
 Buttercups and daisies
 Spring up here and there.

Ere the snow-drop peepeth,
 Ere the crocus bold,
 Ere the early primrose
 Opes its paly gold,
 Somewhere on a sunny bank,
 Buttercups are bright :
 Somewhere 'mong the frozen grass
 Peeps the daisy white ;
 Little hardy flowers,
 Like to children poor
 Playing in their sturdy health
 By their mother's door ;
 Purple with the north wind,
 Yet alert and bold ;
 Fearing not and caring not,
 Though they be a-cold.

HOWITT.

THE MODERN BLUE-STOCKING.

IN all the modern languages, she was Exceedingly well versed, and had devoted
 To their attainment, far more time than has,
 By the best teachers, lately been allotted ;
 For she had taken lessons, twice a week,
 For a full month in each ; and she could speak
 French and Italian, equally as well
 As Chinese, Portuguese, or German ; and,
 What is still more surprising, she could spell
 Most of our longest English words, off hand :
 Was quite familiar in low Dutch and Spanish,
 And thought of studying modern Greek and Danish

INVOCATION.

TELL me, my secret soul,
 Oh ! tell me, Hope and Faith,
 Is there no resting-place
 From sorrow, sin, and death ?—

Is there no happy spot,
 Where mortals may be bless'd,
 Where grief may find a balm,
 And weariness, a rest?

Faith, Hope, and Love, best boons to mortals given,
 Waved their bright wings, and whisper'd,—“YES, IN HEAVEN!”

MACKAY.

TIME.

THE year
 Has gone, and, with it, many a glorious throng
 Of happy dreams. Its mark is on each brow,
 Its shadow in each heart. In its swift course,
 It waved its sceptre o'er the beautiful,
 And they are not. It laid its pallid hand
 Upon the strong man, and the haughty form
 Is fallen, and the flashing eye is dim.
 It trod the hall of revelry, where throng'd
 The bright and joyous, and the tearful wail
 Of stricken ones, is heard where erst the song
 And reckless shout resounded.

G. D. PRENTICE.

POETASTERS.

“SHUT, shut the door, good John!” fatigued, I said;
 “Tie up the knocker; say I’m sick—I’m dead!”
 The dog-star rages! nay, ’tis past a doubt
 All Bedlam or Parnassus is let out:
 Fire in each eye, and papers in each hand,
 They rave, recite, and madden round the land.
 What walls can guard me, or what shades can hide?
 They pierce my thickets, through my grot they glide;
 By land, by water, they renew the charge,
 They stop the chariot, and they board the barge.
 No place is sacred, not the church is free,
 Even Sunday shines no Sabbath-day to me;
 Then from the Mint walks forth the man of rhyme,
 Happy to catch me just at dinner-time.

POPE.

RICHARD'S RESIGNATION.

K. RICH. Too well, too well thou tell'st a tale so ill
Where is the Earl of Wiltshire? Where is Bagot?
What is become of Bushy? Where is Green?
No matter where; of comfort no man speak;
Let's talk of graves, of worms, and epitaphs;
Make dust our paper, and with rainy eyes
Write sorrow on the bosom of the earth.
And yet not so—for what can we bequeath,
Save our deposed bodies to the ground?
Our lands, our lives, and all are Bolingbroke's;
And nothing can we call our own but death,
And that small morsel of the barren earth,
Which serves as paste and cover to our bones.
For heaven's sake, let us sit upon the ground,
And tell sad stories of the death of kings—
How some have been deposed; some slain in war;
Some haunted by the ghosts they have deposed;
Some poison'd by their wives; some sleeping, kill'd;
All murder'd. For within the hollow crown,
That rounds the mortal temples of a king,
Keeps Death his court; and there the antic sits,
Scoffing his state, and grinning at his pomp;
Allowing him a breath, a little scene
To monarchize, be fear'd, and kill with looks;
Infusing him with self and vain conceit,
As if this flesh, which walls about our life,
Were brass impregnable; and humor'd thus,
Comes at the last, and with a little pin
Bores through his castle walls; and, farewell, king!
Cover your heads, and mock not flesh and blood
With solemn reverence; throw away respect,
Tradition, form, and ceremonious duty,
For you have but mistook me all this while.
I live on bread, like you; feel want, like you;
Taste grief, need friends. Subjected thus,
How can you say to me, "I am a king?" SHAKESPEARE.

EVE'S REGRETS ON QUITTING PARADISE.

MUST I thus leave thee, Paradise ? thus leave
Thee, native soil ? these happy walks and shades,
Fit haunt of gods ! where I had hoped to spend,
Quiet, though sad, the respite of that day
That must be mortal to us both ! O flowers,
That never will in other climate grow,
My early visitation and my last
At even, which I bred up with tender hand
From the first opening bud, and gave ye names !
Who now shall rear ye to the sun, or rank
Your tribes, and water from the ambrosial fount ?
Thee, lastly, nuptial bower ! by me adorn'd
With what to sight or smell was sweet ! from thee
How shall I part, and whither wander down
Into a lower world, to this obscure
And wild ? How shall we breathe in other air
Less pure, accustom'd to immortal fruits ? MILTON.

LOVE DUE TO THE CREATOR.

AND ask ye why He claims our love ?
Oh, answer, all ye winds of even,
Oh, answer, all ye lights above,
That watch in yonder darkening heaven ;
Thou earth, in vernal radiance gay
As when His angels first array'd thee,
And thou, O deep-tongued ocean, say
Why man should love the Mind that made thee !

There's not a flower that decks the vale,
There's not a beam that lights the mountain,
There's not a shrub that scents the gale,
There's not a wind that stirs the fountain,
There's not a hue that paints the rose,
There's not a leaf around us lying,
But in its use or beauty shows
True love to us, and love undying ! G. GRIFFIN.

A CHILD'S FIRST IMPRESSION OF A STAR.

SHE had been told that God made all the stars
That twinkled up in heaven, and now she stood Watching the coming of the twilight on,
As if it were a new and perfect world,
And this were its first eve. How beautiful
Must be the work of nature to a child
In its first fresh impression ! Laura stood
By the low window, with the silken lash
Of her soft eye upraised, and her sweet mouth
Half parted with the new and strange delight
Of beauty that she could not comprehend,
And had not seen before. The purple folds
Of the low sunset clouds, and the blue sky
That look'd so still and delicate above,
Fill'd her young heart with gladness, and the eve
Stole on with its deep shadows, and she still Stood looking at the west with that half smile,
As if a pleasant thought were at her heart.
Presently, in the edge of the last tint
Of sunset, where the blue was melted in
To the first golden mellowness, a star
Stood suddenly. A laugh of wild delight
Burst from her lips, and, putting up her hands,
Her simple thought broke forth expressively,— “Father, dear father, God has made a star.”

WILLIS.

THE CARRIER-PIGEON.

THE bird, let loose in Eastern skies, when hastening fondly home,
Ne'er stoops to earth her wing, nor flies where idle warblers roam ;
But high she shoots through air and light, above all low delay,
Where nothing earthly bounds her flight, nor shadow dims her way.

So grant me, God, from every care and stain of passion free,
 Aloft, through Virtue's purer air, to hold my course to thee ;
 No sin to cloud, no lure to stay my soul, as home she springs ;—

Thy sunshine on her joyful way, thy freedom in her wings !

MOORE.

POLYCARP, one of the fathers of the Christian Church, suffered martyrdom at Smyrna, in the year of our Lord 167, during a general persecution of the Christians.

"Go, lictor, lead the prisoner forth, let all the assembly stay,
 For he must openly abjure his Christian faith to-day."

The prætor spake ; the lictor went, and Polycarp appear'd,
 And totter'd, leaning on his staff, to where the pile was rear'd.
 His silver hair, his look benign, which spake his heavenly lot,
 Moved into tears both youth and age, but moved the prætor not.

The heathen spake : "Renounce aloud thy Christian heresy !" —
 "Hope all things else," the old man cried, "yet hope not this from me." —

"But if thy stubborn heart refuse thy Saviour to deny, Thy age shall not avert my wrath ; thy doom shall be—to die !" —

"Think not, O judge ! with menaces, to shake my faith in God ;
 If in His righteous cause I die, I gladly kiss the rod." —

"Blind wretch ! doth not the funeral pile thy vaunting faith appall ?" —

"No funeral pile my heart alarms, if God and duty call." —

"Then expiate thy insolence ; ay, perish in the fire !

Go, lictor, drag him instantly forth to the funeral pyre !"

The lictor dragg'd him instantly forth to the pyre ; with bands
 He bound him to the martyr's stake, he smote him with his hands.

"Abjure thy God," the prætor said, "and thou shalt yet be free." —

"No," cried the hero, "rather let death be my destiny !"

The prætor bow'd ; the licitor laid with haste the torches nigh :
 Forth from the fagots burst the flames, and glanced athwart
 the sky ;
 The patient champion at the stake with flames engirdled stood, Look'd up with rapture-kindling eye, and seal'd his faith in blood.

TO THE PASSION FLOWER.

WHAT though not thine the rose's brilliant glow,
 Or odor of the gifted violet,
 Or dew with which the lily's cheek is wet ;
 Though thine would seem the pallid streaks of woe,
 The drops that from the fount of sorrow flow,
 Thy purple tints of shame ; though strange appear
 The types of torture thou art doom'd to wear ;
 Yet blooms for me no hue like thine below.
 For from thee breathes the odor of a name,
 Whose sweetness melts my soul and dims my eyes ;
 And in thy mystic leaves of woe and shame
 I read a tale to which my heart replies
 In voiceless throbbing and devoted sighs ;
 Death's darkest agony and mercy's claim,
 And love's last words of grief are written in thy dyes.

To spend too much time in studies is sloth ; to use them too much for ornament is affectation ; to make judgment wholly by their rules is the humor of a scholar. They perfect nature, and are perfected by experience ; for natural abilities require study, as natural plants need pruning ; and studies themselves do give forth directions too much at large, except they be bounded in by experience. Crafty men condemn studies, simple men admire them, and wise men use them ; for studies teach not their own use—this wise men learn by observation. Read not to contradict and refute, not to believe and take for granted, but to weigh and consider.

BACON.

ADVICE TO AN AFFECTED SPEAKER.

WHAT do you say?—What? I really do not understand you. Be so good as to explain yourself again.—Upon my word, I do not.—Oh, now I know: you mean to tell me it is a cold day. Why did you not say at once, “It is cold to-day?” If you wish to inform me it rains or snows, pray say, “It rains,” “It snows;” or, if you think I look well, and you choose to compliment me, say, “I think you look well.” “But,” you answer, “that is so common, and so plain, and what everybody can say.” Well, and what if they can? Is it so great a misfortune to be understood when one speaks, and to speak like the rest of the world? I will tell you what, my friend; you and your fine-spoken brethren want one thing—you do not suspect it, and I shall astonish you—you want common sense.

Nay, this is not all: you have something too much; you possess an opinion that you have more sense than others. That is the source of all your pompous nothings, your cloudy sentences, and your big words without a meaning. Before you accost a person, or enter a room, let me pull you by your sleeve and whisper in your ear, “Do not try to show off your sense; have none at all—that is your part. Use plain language, if you can; just such as you find others use, who, in your idea, have no understanding; and then, perhaps, you will get credit for having some.”

LA BRUYÈRE.

REMARKS TO TEACHERS.

It is of the utmost importance, in order to acquire a correct and elegant style of reading, frequently to refer the pupil to the Principles of Elocution, given in the First Part. These should be frequently reviewed, and the directions applied to the selections in Part Second.

THE FOURTH READER.

Part II.

SELECT LITERARY EXERCISES IN READING.

1. CHARACTER OF COLUMBUS.

IRVING.

WASHINGTON IRVING was born in New York, April 3, 1783—died, 1860. As an historian and essayist, Irving had no superior and few equals among the men of his time. His "History of New York," written under the assumed name of Deidrich Knickerbocker; his "History of Columbus," and the "Sketch-Book," were among the earlier triumphs of his genius; but his last and greatest work is the "Life of Washington," concluded just before his death.

COLUMBUS was a man of great and inventive genius. The operations of his mind were energetic, but irregular; bursting forth at times with that irresistible force which characterizes intellect of such an order. His mind had grasped all kinds of knowledge connected with his pursuits; and though his information may appear limited at the present day, and some of his errors palpable, it is because knowledge, in his peculiar department of science, was but scantily developed in his time. His own discoveries enlightened the ignorance of that age; guided conjecture to certainty; and dispelled numerous errors with which he himself had been obliged to struggle.

2. His ambition was lofty and noble. He was full of high thoughts, and anxious to distinguish himself by great achievements. It has been said that a mercenary feeling mingled with his views, and that his stipulations with the Spanish court were selfish and avaricious. The charge is inconsiderate and unjust. He aimed at dignity and wealth in the same lofty spirit in which he sought renown; but they were to arise from the territories he should discover, and be commensurate in importance.

3. He asked nothing of the sovereigns but a command of the countries he hoped to give them, and a share of the profits to support the dignity of his command. The gains that promised to arise from his discoveries, he intended to appropriate in the same princely and pious spirit in which they were demanded. He contemplated works and achievements of benevolence and religion, vast contributions for the relief of the poor of his native city ; the foundation of churches, where masses should be said for the souls of the departed ; and armies for the recovery of the holy sepulchre in Palestine.

4. Columbus was a man of quick sensibility, liable to great excitement, to sudden and strong impressions, and powerful impulses. He was naturally irritable and impetuous, and keenly sensible to injury and injustice ; yet the quickness of his temper was counteracted by the benevolence and generosity of his heart. The magnanimity of his nature shone forth through all the troubles of his stormy career. Though continually outraged in his dignity, and braved in the exercise of his command ; though foiled in his plans and endangered in his person by the seditions of turbulent and worthless men, and that, too, at times when suffering under anxiety of mind and anguish of body sufficient to exasperate the most patient, he restrained his valiant and indignant spirit ; and, by the strong powers of his mind, brought himself to forbear, and reason, and even to supplicate : nor should we fail to notice how free he was from all feeling of revenge, how ready to forgive and forget, on the least signs of repentance and atonement. He has been extolled for his skill in controlling others ; but far greater praise is due to him for the firmness he displayed in governing himself.

5. His magnanimous benignity made him accessible to all kinds of pleasurable sensations from external objects. In his letters and journals, instead of detailing circumstances with the technical precision of a mere navigator, he notices the beauties of nature with the enthusiasm of a poet or a painter.

6. He was devoutly pious ; religion mingled with the whole course of his thoughts and actions, and shines forth in all his most private and unstudied writings. Whenever he made any great discovery, he celebrated it by solemn thanks to God. The voice of prayer and melody of praise rose from his ships when they first beheld the New World, and his first action on landing was to prostrate himself upon the earth and return thanks.

7. With all the visionary fervor of his imagination, its fondest dreams fell short of reality. He died in ignorance of the real grandeur of his discovery. Until his last breath he entertained the idea that he had merely opened a new way to the old resorts of opulent commerce, and had discovered some of the wild regions of the East. He supposed Hispaniola to be the ancient Ophir which had been visited by the ships of Solomon, and that Cuba and Terra Firma were but remote parts of Asia.

8. What visions of glory would have broken upon his mind could he have known that he had indeed discovered a new continent, equal to the whole of the Old World in magnitude, and separated by two vast oceans from all the earth hitherto known by civilized man! And how would his magnanimous spirit have been consoled, amidst the afflictions of age and the cares of penury, the neglect of a fickle public, and the injustice of an ungrateful king, could he have anticipated the splendid empires which were to spread over the beautiful world he had discovered; and the nations, and the tongues, and languages which were to fill its lands with his renown, and to revere and bless his name to the latest posterity!

2. THE LANDING OF COLUMBUS.

ROGERS.

SAMUEL ROGERS was born in England, in 1765, and died in 1855. His poetry has no great claim to originality; but it possesses, in an eminent degree, the merits of good taste, refinement, and careful composition.

1. THE sails were furl'd; with many a melting close,
Solemn and slow the evening anthem rose,—
Rose to the Virgin. 'Twas the hour of day
When setting suns o'er summer seas display

- A path of glory, opening in the west
 To golden climes and islands of the blest ;
 And human voices on the silent air
 Went o'er the waves in songs of gladness there !
2. Chosen of men ! 'Twas thine at noon of night
 First from the prow to hail the glimmering light :
 (Emblem of Truth divine, whose secret ray Enters the soul and makes the darkness day !)
 "Pedro ! Rodrigo ! there methought it shone !
 There—in the west ! and now, alas, 'tis gone !—
 'Twas all a dream ! we gaze and gaze in vain !
 But mark and speak not, there it comes again !
 It moves !—what form unseen, what being there
 With torch-like lustre fires the murky air ?
 His instincts, passions, say, how like our own !
 Oh, when will day reveal a world unknown ?"
3. Long on the deep the mists of morning lay ;
 Then rose, revealing as they rolled away
 Half-circling hills, whose everlasting woods
 Sweep with their sable skirts the shadowy floods :
 And say, when all, to holy transport given,
 Embraced and wept as at the gates of heaven,—
 When one and all of us, repentant, ran,
 And, on our faces, bless'd the wondrous man,—
 Say, was I then deceived, or from the skies
 Burst on my ear seraphic harmonies ?
4. "Glory to God !" unnumber'd voices sung,—
 "Glory to God !" the vales and mountains rung,
 Voices that hail'd creation's primal morn,
 And to the shepherds sung a Saviour born.
 Slowly, bareheaded, through the surf we bore
 The sacred cross, and kneeling kiss'd the shore.

3. PHILANTHROPY AND CHARITY.

DR. BROWNSON.

DR. O. A. BROWNSON was born at Stockbridge, Vermont, Sept. 16, 1803. He comes of an old New-England stock, and was brought up in the ways of his Puritan ancestors. His youth and early manhood were passed in the vain pursuit of religious truth, guided solely by his own powerful intellect, until, at length, by the blessing of God, he made his way to the golden portals of the true Church. Since then, Dr. Brownson has devoted his great talents to the service of Catholicity, and few men have done more than he to make the truths of faith manifest to the unbeliever. As a Catholic reviewer, he holds a high place in the world of letters; but it is as a Christian philosopher, logician, and metaphysician, that he is known to the learned of all nations. His fame is, indeed, universal, and his authority of the highest weight as well east as west of the Atlantic.

1. THE natural sentiment of philanthropy is, at best, only human love. This answers very well, when the work to be done is simply to propose grand schemes, make brilliant and eloquent speeches, or when there are no disagreeable duties to be performed, no violent natural repugnances to be overcome; but it fails in the hour of severe trial. Your philanthropist starts with generous impulses, with a glowing enthusiasm; and so long as there are no great discouragements, no disgusting offices in his way, and he has even a small number of admiring friends to stimulate his zeal, applaud his eloquence, flatter his pride, and soothe him for the rebuffs he meets from the world, he may keep on his course, and continue his task.

2. But let him find himself entirely alone, let him have no little public of his own, which is all the world to him, let him be thwarted on every point, let him be obliged to work in secret, unseen by all but the All-seeing Eye, encounter from men nothing but contradiction, contempt, and ingratitude, and he will soon begin to say to himself, Why suffer and endure so much for the unworthy? He who loves man for man's sake, loves only a creature, a being of imperfect worth, of no more worth than himself,—perhaps not so much; and why shall he love him more than himself, and sacrifice himself for him? The highest stretch of human love is, to love our neighbor as we love ourselves; and we do injustice to ourselves, when we love them more than we do ourselves.

3. Nay, philanthropy itself is a sort of selfishness. It is a sentiment, not a principle. Its real motive is not another's good, but its own satisfaction according to its nature. It seeks the good of others, because the good of others is the means of its own satisfaction, and is as really selfish in its principle as any other of our sentiments; for there is a broad distinction between the sentiment of philanthropy, and the duty of doing good to others,—between seeking the good of others from sentiment, and seeking it in obedience to a law which binds the conscience.

4. The measure of the capacity of philanthropy, as a sentiment, is the amount of satisfaction it can bring to the possessor. So long as, upon the whole, he finds it more delightful to play the philanthropist than the miser, for instance, he will do it, but no longer. Hence, philanthropy must always decrease just in proportion to the increase of the repugnances it must encounter, and fail us just at the moment when it is most needed, and always in proportion as it is needed. It follows the law so observable in all human society, and helps most when and where its help is least needed. Here is the condemnation of every scheme, however plausible it may look, that in any degree depends on philanthropy for its success.

5. The principle the Associationists want for their success is not philanthropy,—the love of man for man's sake,—but divine charity, not to be had and preserved out of the Catholic Church. Charity is, in relation to its subject, a supernaturally infused virtue; in relation to its object, the supreme and exclusive love of God for his own sake, and man for the sake of God. He who has it, is proof against all trials; for his love does not depend on man, who so often proves himself totally unamiable and unworthy, but on God, who is always and everywhere infinitely amiable and deserving of all love. He visits the sick, the prisoner, the poor, for it is God whom he visits; he clasps with tenderness the leprous to his bosom and kisses their sores, for it is God he embraces and whose dead wounds he kisses. The most painful and disgusting offices are sweet and easy, because he performs them for God, who is his love, and whose love inflames his heart. Whenever there is service to be rendered to one of God's little ones, he runs with eagerness to do it; for it is a service to be rendered to God himself.

6. "Charity never faileth." It is proof against all natural repugnances; it overcomes earth and hell; and brings God down to tabernacle with men. Dear to it is this poor beggar for it sees in him only our Lord who had "not where to lay his head;" dear are the sorrowing and the afflicted, for it sees in them Him who was "a man of sorrows and acquainted with infirmity;" dear are these poor outcasts, for in them it beholds Him who was "scorned and rejected of men;" dear are the wronged, the oppressed, the down-trodden, for in them it beholds the Innocent One nailed to the Cross, and dying to atone for human wickedness.

7. And it joys to succor them all; for in so doing, it makes reparation to God for the poverty, sufferings, wrongs, contempt, and ignominious death which he endured for our sakes; or it is his poverty it relieves in relieving the poor, his hunger it feeds in feeding the hungry, his nakedness it clothes in throwing its robe over the naked, his afflictions it consoles in consoling the sorrowing, his wounds into which it pours oil and wine and which it binds up. "Inasmuch as ye did it unto the least of these my brethren, ye did it unto me."

8. All is done to and for God, whom it loves more than men, more than life, and more than heaven itself, if to love him and heaven were not one and the same thing. This is the principle you need; with this principle, you have God with you and for you, and failure is impossible. But with this principle, Association is, at best, a matter of indifference; for this is sufficient of itself at all times, under any and every form of political, social, or industrial organization. He who has God can have nothing more.

4. LOVE FOR THE CHURCH.

DR. BROWNSON.

1. God, in establishing his Church from the foundation of the world, in giving his life on the cross for her, in abiding always with her, in her tabernacles, unto the consummation of the world, in adorning her as a Bride with all the graces of the Holy Spirit, in denominating her his Beloved, his Spouse, has taught us how he regards her, how deep and tender, how infinite and inexhaustible, his love for her, and with what love and honor we should behold her. He loves us with an infinite love, and has died to redeem us ; but he loves us and wills our salvation, only in and through his Church. He would bring us to himself, and he never ceases as a lover to woo our love ; but he wills us to love, and reverence, and adore him only as children of his Beloved. Our love and reverence must redound to his glory as her Spouse, and gladden her maternal heart, and swell her maternal joy, or he wills them not, knows them not.

2. Oh, it is frightful to forget the place the Church holds in the love and providence of God, and to regard the relation in which we stand to her as a matter of no moment ! She is the one grand object on which are fixed all heaven, all earth, ay, and all hell. Behold her impersonation in the Blessed Virgin, the Holy Mother of God, the glorious Queen of heaven. Humble and obscure she lived, poor and silent, yet all heaven turned their eyes towards her ; all hell trembled before her ; all earth needed her. Dear was she to all the hosts of heaven ; for in her they beheld their Queen, the Mother of grace, the Mother of mercies, the channel through which all love, and mercies, and graces, and good things were to flow to man, and return to the glory and honor of their Father.

3. Humblest of mortal maidens, lowliest on earth, under God, she was highest in heaven. So is the Church, our sweet Mother. Oh, she is no creation of the imagination ! Oh, she is no mere accident in human history, in divine providence, divine grace, in the conversion of souls ! She is a glorious, a living reality, living the divine, the eternal life of God. Her Maker is her Husband, and he places her, after him, over all in heaven, on the earth, and under the earth. All that he can do to adorn and exalt her, he has done. All he can give he gives ; for he gives himself, and unites her in indissoluble union with himself. Infinite love, infinite wisdom, infinite power, can do no more.

4. All hail to thee, dear and ever-blessed Mother, thou chosen one, thou well-beloved, thou Bride adorned, thou chaste immaculate Spouse, thou Universal Queen ! All hail to thee. We honor thee, for God honors thee ; we love thee, for God loves thee ; we obey thee, for thou ever commandest the wil of thy lord. The passers-by may jeer thee ; the servants of the prince of this world may call thee black ; the daughters of the uncircumcised may beat thee, earth and hell rise up in wrath against thee, and seek to despoil thee of thy rich ornaments and to sully thy fair name ; but all the more dear art thou to our hearts ; all the more deep and sincere the homage we pay thee ; and all the more earnestly do we pray thee to receive our humble offerings, and to own us for thy children, and watch over us that we never forfeit the right to call thee our Mother.

5. MARY, QUEEN OF MERCY.

MANGAN.

JAMES CLARENCE MANGAN.—Among the poets whom Ireland has produced within the last ten or fifteen years, Clarence Mangan deservedly occupies a high place. As a translator, he was inimitable: he translated from the Irish, the French, the German, the Spanish, the Italian, the Danish, and the Eastern languages, with such a versatile facility as not only to transfuse into his own tongue the substance of the original, but the graces of style and ornament, and idiomatic expression, which are peculiar to the poetry of every country. He frequently surpassed the originals in the fluency of his language. Many of the poems called “translations,” are entirely his own.—Ballads of Ireland.

1. THERE lived a knight long years ago,
 Proud, carnal, vain, devotionless ;
 Of God above, or hell below,
 He took no thought, but, undismay'd,
 Pursued his course of wickedness.
 His heart was rock ; he never pray'd
 To be forgiven for all his treasons ;
 He only said, at certain seasons,
 “ O Mary, Queen of Mercy ! ”
2. Years roll'd, and found him still the same,
 Still draining Pleasure's poison-bowl ;
 Yet felt he now and then some shame ;
 The torment of the Undying Worm
 At whiles woke in his trembling soul ;
 And then, though powerless to reform,

Would he, in hope to appease that sternest
Avenger, cry, and more in earnest,

“O Mary, Queen of Mercy!”

3. At last Youth's riotous time was gone,
And Loathing now came after Sin.
With locks yet brown, he felt as one
Grown gray at heart ; and oft, with tears,
He tried, but all in vain, to win
From the dark desert of his years
One flower of hope ; yet, morn and evening,
He still cried, but with deeper meaning,
“O Mary, Queen of Mercy!” .
4. A happier mind, a holier mood,
A purer spirit ruled him now :
No more in thrall to flesh and blood,
He took a pilgrim-staff in hand,
And, under a religious vow,
Travail'd his way to Pommerland ;
There enter'd he an humble cloister,
Exclaiming, while his eyes grew moister,
“O Mary, Queen of Mercy!”
5. Here, shorn and cowl'd, he laid his cares
Aside, and wrought for God alone.
Albeit he sang no choral prayers,
Nor matin hymn nor laud could learn,
He mortified his flesh to stone ;
For him no penance was too stern ;
And often pray'd he on his lonely
Cell-couch at night, but still said only,
“O Mary, Queen of Mercy!”
6. They buried him with mass and song
Aneath a little knoll so green ;
But, lo ! a wonder-sight !—Ere long
Rose, blooming, from that verdant mound,
The fairest lily ever seen ;
And, on its petal-edges round

Relieving their translucent whiteness,
 Did shine these words, in gold-hued brightness,
 "O Mary, Queen of Mercy!"

7. And, would God's angels give thee power,
 Thou, dearest reader, mightst behold
 The fibres of this holy flower
 Upspringing from the dead man's heart,
 In tremulous threads of light and gold ;
 Then wouldst thou choose the better part,
 And thenceforth flee Sin's foul suggestions ;
 Thy sole response to mocking questions,
 "O Mary, Queen of Mercy!"

6. RELIGIOUS MEMORIALS.

SIR HUMPHREY DAVY.

SIR HUMPHREY DAVY—an eminent English philosopher and chemist of the present century. He wrote some very interesting books of travel.

1. THE rosary, which you see suspended around my neck, is a memorial of sympathy and respect for an illustrious man. I was passing through France, in the reign of Napoleon, by the peculiar privilege granted to a savant, on my road to Italy. I had just returned from the Holy Land, and had in my possession two or three of the rosaries which are sold to pilgrims at Jerusalem, as having been suspended in the Holy Sepulchre. Pius VII. was then in imprisonment at Fontainebleau. By a special favor, on the plea of my return from the Holy Land, I obtained permission to see this venerable and illustrious pontiff. I carried with me one of my rosaries.

2. He received me with great kindness. I tendered my services to execute any commissions, not political ones, he might think fit to intrust me with, in Italy, informing him that I was an Englishman: he expressed his thanks, but declined troubling me. I told him that I was just returned from the Holy Land; and, bowing, with great humility, offered him my rosary from the Holy Sepulchre.

3. He received it with a smile, touched it with his lips, gave his benediction over it, and returned it into my hands, supposing, of course, that I was a Roman Catholic. I had meant to present it to his Holiness ; but the blessing he had bestowed upon it, and the touch of his lips, made it a precious relic to me ; and I restored it to my neck, round which it has ever since been suspended. . . . "We shall meet again ; adieu : " and he gave me his paternal blessing.

4. It was eighteen months after this interview, that I went out, with almost the whole population of Rome, to receive and welcome the triumphal entry of this illustrious father of the Church into his capital. He was borne on the shoulders of the most distinguished artists, headed by Canova : and never shall I forget the enthusiasm with which he was received ; it is impossible to describe the shouts of triumph and of rapture sent up to heaven by every voice. And when he gave his benediction to the people, there was a universal prostration, a sobbing, and marks of emotion and joy, almost like the bursting of the heart. I heard everywhere around me cries of "The holy father ! the most holy father ! His restoration is the work of God !"

5. I saw tears streaming from the eyes of almost all the women about me, many of whom were sobbing hysterically, and old men were weeping as if they were children. I pressed my rosary to my breast on this occasion, and repeatedly touched with my lips that part of it which had received the kiss of the most venerable pontiff. I preserve it with a kind of hallowed feeling, as the memorial of a man whose sanctity, firmness, meekness, and benevolence, are an honor to his Church and to human nature : and it has not only been useful to me, by its influence upon my own mind, but it has enabled me to give pleasure to others ; and has, I believe, been sometimes beneficial in insuring my personal safety.

6. I have often gratified the peasants of Apulia and Calabria, by presenting them to kiss a rosary from the Holy Sepulchre, which had been hallowed by the touch of the lips and benediction of the Pope : and it has even been respected by, and procured me a safe passage through, a party of brigands, who once stopped me in the passes of the Apennines.

THE BATTLE OF CARILLON.

GARNEAU.

F. X. GARNEAU stands deservedly high amongst American writers as the author of the best history of Canada yet written. "This rank his history holds," says a Canadian writer, "not only for the great information it contains, but for the purity and perspicuity of the language which he employs to portray his opinions of men, and things in general, connected with Canada; in fact, we have no history of Canada equal to Garneau's." Mr. Garneau is a native of Quebec. He has been a member of the Council of Public Instruction of Lower Canada, and an honorary member of all the principal literary and historical societies of British America, and the adjacent States of the Federal Republic.

1. THE heights of Carillon are situated in the angle formed by the discharge of Lake St. Sacrament, named River La Chute, and Lake Champlain, into which that river pours its waters. These banks are of no great elevation, and their point culminates at the very summit of the angle, terminating in a gentle slope on the lake side, and more abruptly on that of River La Chute, along which runs a little sandy beach about fifty yards in breadth. At the extremity of the angle, on the edge of the declivity, there was placed a small redoubt, the fire of which commanded the lake and the river, and raked the sloping ground along the water-course. This redoubt was connected by a parapet with Fort Carillon, the ruins of which are still to be seen. The fort, which was capable of containing three or four hundred men, was placed midway in the angle, and commanded the centre and right of the table-land, as well as the level ground beneath, bordering on Lake Champlain, and the St. Frederick river. The army passed the night of the 6th—7th July, 1758, in bivouac. The enemies' fires indicated that they were in force at the ford. The intrenchments, formed by zig-zag angles, were commenced on the evening of the 6th, and continued with great activity all day on the 7th; they took the fort, followed for some time the crest of the heights on the side of River La Chute, then turned to the right, to cross the angle at its base, following the windings of a shallow gorge which intersects the table-land, and finally descended to the shallow water which extends to the lake. They might be six hundred yards in extent, and five feet in height ; they were formed of round trees laid one on the other ; in front were placed up-rooted trees, the large branches of which, pointed at the end, formed a sort of chevaux-de-frise.

2. Each battalion having taken on its arrival the post it was to hold during the action, threw up that portion of the intrenchment destined for its protection. The men all worked with incredible ardor. The Canadians, who had been unable to obtain their hatchets sooner, only commenced in the afternoon their intrenchment in the shallow water on the Lake Champlain side. They finished on the following day about noon, just as the English made their appearance. The country in front being covered with wood, General Montcalm had all the trees felled for a certain distance round, in order to have a clearer view of the movements of the enemy.

3. Meanwhile, General Abercromby had disembarked with his whole army. He learned from some prisoners that the French had intrenched themselves in order to await a reinforcement of 3,000 men, which the Chevalier de Levis was expected to bring. He therefore resolved to attack Montcalm before the arrival of that force. The engineer whom he had sent to reconnoitre having brought him word that the French works were not yet finished, he immediately put himself in motion, and on the evening of the 7th pushed forward his vanguard, under Colonel Bradstreet, to within some 1400 yards of the French. Both sides then prepared for action on the morrow.

4. The English army, exclusive of some hundreds of men left at the Chute, and to guard the boats at the foot of the lake, still numbered over 15,000 chosen men, commanded by experienced officers, and it went into the combat with all the confidence given by great numerical force. The French army reckoned only 3,600 men, of whom 450 were Canadians and marines ; there were no savages. Montcalm placed 300 men in charge of Fort Carillon, thus leaving 3,300 for the defence of the intrenchments, which, from their limited extent, that force was enabled to line three men deep. The order was given for each battalion to hold in reserve its grenadier company, with a picket of infantry, and to draw them up in the rear, so as to have them in readiness to send wherever they might be needed. The Chevalier de Levis, who arrived that same morning, was charged with the command of the right wing, having under him the Canadians, who formed the extreme right, under the order of M. de Raymond; the left wing was commanded by M. de Bourlamarque; General Montcalm reserved the centre for himself. Such was the French order of battle.

5. General Abercromby formed his army into four columns, so as to attack all points simultaneously. The grenadiers and the flower of the infantry, chosen to form the head of the columns, received orders to throw themselves on the intrenchments, with bayonets fixed, and only to draw when they had leaped in over the breastworks. At the same time, a number of barges were to descend the River La Chute, to threaten the left flank of the French. At one o'clock the English columns began to move; they were intermixed with light troops, among whom were some Indians. These savages, under cover of the trees, opened, as they approached, a murderous fire. The columns emerged from the woods, descended the ravine in front of the intrenchments, and advanced steadily, in admirable order, the two first against the left wing of the French, the third against their centre, and the last against their right, following the foot of the hill to the strand, where the Canadians were stationed. The fire commenced by the skirmishers of the right column, and extended gradually from one column to the other, on to the left, which endeavored to penetrate into the works by the right flank of the Chevalier de Levis. That officer, perceiving the intention of this column, composed of grenadiers and Scottish highlanders, ordered the Canadians to make a sortie, and attack it on the flank. This attack succeeded so well that the fire of the Canadians, joined to that of the two battalions placed on the hill, obliged the column to fall back on that which was at its right, in order to avoid a double flank fire. The four columns, forced to converge a little as they advanced, as well to protect their flanks as to reach the point of attack, found themselves all close together when they gained the heights. At the same moment some thirty barges presented themselves on the River

La Chute, menacing the French left. Some cannon-shots from the fort, which sunk two of them, and some men sent along the shore, sufficed to put them to flight. General Montcalm had given orders that the enemy should be permitted to approach within twenty paces of the intrenchments. That order was punctually executed. When the English reached the place appointed, the musketry assailed their compact masses with such prompt and terrible effect, that they reeled and fell into disorder. Forced for a moment to fall back, they nevertheless recovered themselves quickly, and returned to the charge ; but, forgetting their orders, they began to draw. The fire opened with great vivacity all along the line, and was long and well sustained ; but, after the greatest exertions, the assailants were forced a second time to retire, leaving the ground covered with dead. They rallied at some distance, formed their columns again, and, after some moments, rushed again on the intrenchments, in the face of so brisk and continuous a fire as had hardly ever been seen. General Montcalm braved all the danger like the meanest of his soldiers. From the centre, where he was placed, he darted to every point that appeared in danger, either to give orders, or conduct assistance. After unheard of efforts, the English were at length repulsed.

6. Astonished more and more by so obstinate a resistance, General Abercromby, who had thought that nothing could stand before the forces he had at his disposal, could not persuade himself that he should fail before a force so inferior in numbers ; he thought that whatever might be the courage of his adversaries, they must eventually give way in a struggle whose violence and duration would but make their defeat the more ruinous to them. He resolved then to continue the attack with energy until success should crown his efforts, and from one till five o'clock his troops returned full six times to the charge, and were each time repulsed with considerable loss. The frail ramparts that protected the French caught fire several times in the course of the action.

7. The British columns having failed in their first simultaneous attack on Montcalm's wings and centre, were then brought together ; thus united, they attacked now the right, now the centre, now the left of the French, with no better success than before. Against the right their most furious assault was made, and there it was that the battle raged the fiercest. For three consecutive hours did the grenadiers and the Scotch highlanders continue to charge with courage that never faltered. The highlanders especially, under Lord John Murray, covered themselves with glory. They formed the head of a column almost right in front of the Canadians. Their light and picturesque costume distinguished them from all the others in the midst of smoke and fire. They lost the half of their soldiers, with twenty-five officers killed or grievously wounded. But their attack, like the others, was at length repulsed, and the efforts of the assailants failed once more before the calm but obstinate intrepidity of the French troops, who fought to the cries of "Vive le Roi ! Vive notre général !" During these several charges the Canadians still made sorties on the flanks of the enemy, and carried off prisoners.

8. At half-past five, General Abercromby, losing every vestige of hope, withdrew all his columns to the woods, to enable them to draw their breath ; he would make one more attempt before giving the signal for retreat. An hour after, they reappeared, and commenced a general attack on the entire French line. All the troops took part in it, but they met the same opposition as in all the previous assaults ; and, after useless efforts, they were forced at length to yield the victory to their opponents. The English retired under cover of a cloud of sharp-shooters, whose fire, with that of the Canadians, who sallied forth in pursuit of them, was prolonged till night.

9. The French troops were exhausted with fatigue, but wild with joy. General Montcalm, accompanied by the Chevalier de Levis and his staff, went all through the ranks, and thanked them in the king's name for the conduct they had maintained through all that glorious day, one of the most memorable in the records of French valor. Being unable to believe, however, in the definitive retreat of the English, and expecting a new engagement on the morrow, he gave his orders and made his preparations to be ready to receive them. The troops passed the night in their respective positions ; they cleaned their arms, and prepared to commence at daybreak the completion of the intrenchments, which they strengthened with two batteries, one to the right, with four pieces of cannon, the other to the left, with six. After some hours of expectation, seeing that the enemy did not appear, General Montcalm sent out some detachments to reconnoitre. They proceeded some distance from La Chute, and burned an intrenchment which the English had commenced raising and had abandoned. On the morrow, the 10th, the Chevalier de Levis pushed on to the foot of Lake St. Sacrament with the grenadiers, the volunteers, and the Canadians ; he found only the traces of Abercromby's precipitate flight. The same night that followed the battle, that general had continued his retrograde movement toward the lake, and that movement had become an actual flight. He had abandoned on the way his tools, a part of his baggage, a great number of wounded—who were taken up by the Chevalier de Levis—and had embarked in all haste at the first dawn of day, after throwing his provisions into the water.

10. Such was the battle of Carillon, in which 3,600 men struggled victoriously for more than six hours against 15,000 choice soldiers. The winning of that memorable day singularly increased the reputation of Montcalm (whom fortune seemed to favor ever since he had been in America), and increased still more his popularity among the soldiers.

8. LANGUAGE OF A MAN OF EDUCATION.

COLERIDGE.

SAMUEL TAYLOR COLERIDGE, an English poet, died in 1834, aged 62. He was one of the remarkable men of his times, and exerted a wide and deep intellectual influence on minds of the highest class. He was decidedly an original poet, and a critic of unrivalled excellence. Coleridge's life was not what the admirers of his genius could have wished.

1. WHAT is that which first strikes us, and strikes us at once, in a man of education ? and which, among educated men, so instantly distinguishes the man of superior mind, that (as was observed with eminent propriety of the late Edmund Burke) "we cannot stand under the same archway during a shower of rain, without finding him out?"

2. Not the weight or novelty of his remarks; not any unusual interest of facts communicated by him; for we may suppose both the one and the other precluded by the shortness of our intercourse, and the triviality of the subjects. The difference will be impressed and felt, though the conversation should be confined to the state of the weather or the pavement.

3. Still less will it arise from any peculiarity in his words and phrases. For, if he be, as we now assume, a well-educated man, as well as a man of superior powers, he will not fail to follow the golden rule of Julius Cæsar, Avoid an unusual word as you would a rock; unless where new things necessitate new terms. It must have been among the earliest lessons of his youth, that the breach of this precept, at all times hazardous, becomes ridiculous in the topics of ordinary conversation.

4. There remains but one other point of distinction possible; and this must be, and in fact is, the true cause of the impression made on us. It is the unpremeditated and evidently habitual arrangement of his words, grounded on the habit of foreseeing, in each integral part, or, more plainly, in every sentence, the whole that he then intends to communicate. However irregular and desultory his talk, there is method in the fragments.

5. Listen, on the other hand, to an ignorant man, though perhaps shrewd and able in his particular calling; whether he be describing or relating. We immediately perceive that his memory alone is called into action; and that the objects and events recur in the narration in the same order, and with the same accompaniments, however accidental or impertinent, as they had first occurred to the narrator.

6. The necessity of taking breath, the efforts of recollection, and the abrupt rectification of its failures, produce all his pauses; and with exception of the "and then," the "and there," and the still less significant "and so," they constitute likewise all his connections.

9. LANGUAGE.

HOLMES.

O. W. HOLMES—an American poet of the day. He possesses much humor and genial sentiment, and his style is remarkable for its purity and exquisite finish. He possesses the happy talent of blending ludicrous ideas with fancy and imagination. His lyrics sparkle with mirth, and his serious pieces arrest the attention by touches of genuine pathos and tenderness. "Terpsichore," "Mania," and "Poetry," are among his longest and best pieces.

1. SOME words on Language may be well applied ;
 And take them kindly, though they touch your pride.
 Words lead to things ; a scale is more precise,— Coarse speech, bad grammar, swearing, drinking, vice.
 Our cold Northeaster's icy fetter clips
 The native freedom of the Saxon lips :
 See the brown peasant of the plastic South,
 How all his passions play about his mouth !
 With us, the feature that transmits the soul,
 A frozen, passive, palsied breathing-hole.

2. The crampy shackles of the ploughboy's walk
 Tie the small muscles, when he strives to talk ;
 Not all the pumice of the polish'd town
 Can smooth this roughness of the barnyard down ;
 Rich, honor'd, titled, he betrays his race
 By this one mark—he's awkward in the face ;—
 Nature's rude impress, long before he knew
 The sunny street that holds the sifted few.

3. It can't be help'd ; though, if we're taken young,
 We gain some freedom of the lips and tongue :
 But school and college often try in vain
 To break the padlock of our boyhood's chain ;
 One stubborn word will prove this axiom true—
 No late-caught rustic can enunciate view.¹

¹ The poet here humorously alludes to the difficulty which many persons, bred in retirement, find in pronouncing this word correctly. It will be difficult to express in letters the manner in which it is fre-

4. A few brief stanzas may be well employ'd
 To speak of errors we can all avoid.
 Learning condemns beyond the reach of hope
 The careless churl that speaks of sōap for sōap;
 Her edict exiles from her fair abode
 The clownish voice that utters rōad for rōad;
 Less stern to him who calls his cōat a cōat,
 And steers his bōat believing it a bōat.
 She pardon'd one, our classic city's boast,
 Who said, at Cambridge, mōst instead of mōst;
 But knit her brows, and stamp'd her angry foot,
 To hear a teacher call a root¹ a root.²
5. Once more: speak clearly, if you speak at all;
 Carve every word before you let it fall;
 Don't, like a lecturer or dramatic star,
 Try over hard to roll the British R;
 Do put your accents in the proper spot;
 Don't—let me beg you—don't say "How?" for "What?"
 And when you stick on conversation's burs,
 Don't strew the pathway with those dreadful urs.³

10. THE INDIANS.

STORY.

JOSEPH STORY.—In 1811, Joseph Story was appointed Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States, and held the office with much ability until his death in 1845. His principal literary writings are contained in a collection of his discourses, reviews, and miscellanies.

1. THERE is, in the fate of these unfortunate beings, much to awaken our sympathy, and much to disturb the sobriety of uently mispronounced, but it is a sound somewhat similar to vð. The proper pronunciation is vð. They, also, who give the second sound of o in the words soap, road, coat, boat, and most, come in for a small share of his lash.

¹ Rōot.

² Root (rūt).

³ The drawling style in which many persons are in the habit of talking, heedlessly hesitating to think of a word, and the meanwhile supplying its place by the unmeaning syllable "ur," is here

our judgment ; much which may be urged to excuse their own atrocities ; much in their characters which betray us into an involuntary admiration. What can be more eloquent than their history ? By a law of nature they seemed destined to a slow but sure extinction. Everywhere at the approach of the white man they fade away. We hear the rustling of their footsteps, like that of the withered leaves of autumn, and they are gone forever.

2. They pass mournfully by us, and they return no more. Two centuries ago, and the smoke of their wigwams, and the fires of their councils rose in every valley, from the Hudson Bay to the farthest Florida, from the ocean to the Mississippi and the lakes. The shouts of victory and the war-dance rang through the mountains and the glades. The thick arrows and the deadly tomahawk whistled through the forests ; and the hunter's trace and dark encampment startled the wild beasts in their lairs. The warriors stood forth in their glory. The young listened to the song of other days. The mothers played with their infants, and gazed on the scene with warm hopes of the future. The aged sat down, but they wept not ; they should soon be at rest in finer regions, where the Great Spirit dwells, in a home prepared for the brave beyond the western skies.

3. Braver men never lived ; truer men never drew the bow. They had courage, and fortitude, and sagacity, and perseverance beyond most of the human race. They shrank from no dangers, and they feared no hardships. If they had the vices of savage life, they had its virtues also. They were true to their country, their friends, and their homes. If they forgave not injury, neither did they forget kindness. If their vengeance was terrible, their fidelity and generosity were unquerable also. Their love, like their hatred, stopped not this side of the grave.

4. But where are they ? Where are the villagers and war happily condemned. Such habits may easily be corrected by a little presence of mind, and particularly by following the direction, Think twice before you speak once.

riors and youth ; the sachems and the tribes ; the hunters and their families ? They have perished ; they are consumed. The wasting pestilence has not alone done the mighty work. No, nor famine—nor war ; there has been a mightier power ; a moral canker, which has eaten into their heart cores—a plague, which the touch of the white man communicated—a poison which betrayed them to lingering ruin. The winds of the Atlantic fan not a single region which they may call their own. Already the last feeble remnant of their race are preparing for their journey beyond the Mississippi. I see them leave their miserable homes—the aged, the helpless, the men, and the warriors—“few and faint, yet fearless still.”

5. The ashes are cold upon their native hearths. The smoke no longer curls around their lowly cabins. They move on with slow unsteady steps. The white man is upon their heels for error or dispatch, but they heed him not. They turn to take a last look of their desolate villages. They cast a last glance upon the graves of their fathers. They shed no tears ; they utter no cry ; they heave no groans. There is something in their hearts which passes speech. There is something in their looks, not of vengeance or submission, but of hard necessity, which stifles both ; which chokes all utterance ; which has no aim or method. It is courage absorbed by despair. They linger but a moment. Their look is onward.

6. They have passed the fatal stream. It shall never be repassed by them, no—never. Yet there lies not between us and them an impassable gulf. They know and feel that there is for them still one remove farther, not distant nor unseen. It is to the general burial-ground of their race.

7. Reason as we may, it is impossible not to read in such a state much which we know not how to interpret ; much of provocation to cruel deeds and deep resentments ; much of apology for wrong and perfidy ; much of pity mingling with indignation ; much of doubt and misgiving as to the past ; much of painful recollections, much of dark forebodings.

11. INDIAN NAMES.

SIGOURNEY.

MRS. LYDIA H. SIGOURNEY is a popular American poetess. She has written no poem of length, but many of her fugitive pieces evince a light and agreeable poetic talent.

1. YE say, they all have pass'd away,
That noble race and brave,
That their light canoes have vanish'd
From off the crested wave ;
That 'mid the forests where they roam'd
There rings no hunter's shout ;
But their name is on your waters,
You may not wash it out.
2. 'Tis where Ontario's billow
Like Ocean's surge is curl'd,
Where strong Niagara's thunders wake
The echo of the world ;
Where red Missouri bringeth
Rich tributes from the West,
And Rappahannock sweetly sleeps
On green Virginia's breast.
3. Ye say, their cone-like cabins,
That cluster'd o'er the vale,
Have fled away like wither'd leaves
Before the autumn gale ;
But their memory liveth on your hills,
Their baptism on your shore,
Your everlasting rivers speak
Their dialect of yore.
4. Old Massachusetts wears it
Within her lordly crown,
And broad Ohio bears it,
Amid her young renown ;

Connecticut hath wreathed it
 Where her quiet foliage waves,
 And bold Kentucky breathes it hoarse,
 Through all her ancient caves.

5. Wachusett hides its lingering voice
 Within his rocky heart,
 And Alleghany graves its tone
 Throughout his lofty chart ;
 Monadnock on his forehead hoar
 Doth seal the sacred trust ;
 Your mountains build their monuments,
 Though ye destroy their dust.
-

12. ST. VINCENT, DEACON AND MARTYR.

MRS. ANNA JAMESON.

MRS. JAMESON was born in Dublin, A. D. 1797. "Her father, Mr. Murphy, an artist of merit, was painter in ordinary to the Princess Charlotte; and from his conversation and example she derived her enthusiasm for art and intimate acquaintance with its technicalities." Mrs. Jameson's numerous works on art are the most attractive in the English language. Her splendid series (one of the latest efforts of her genius), "Sacred and Legendary Art," "Legends of the Monastic Orders," and "Legends of the Madonna," has established her reputation, both as an artist and an author, beyond all competition in her own peculiar department. Mrs. Jameson is a Protestant, but her inspiration is of the loftiest and most Catholic. In her devoted and life-long researches she has attained to the sublime heights which the old masters trod, and there pays her graceful homage to the religion which was their inspiration.

1. THIS renowned saint and martyr of the early Christian Church has been most popular in Spain, the scene of his history, and in France, where he has been an object of particular veneration from the sixth century. It is generally allowed that the main circumstances of the history of Vincent, death at Saragossa, of his sufferings for the cause of Christ, and his invincible courage, expressed by his name, rest on concurrent testimony of the highest antiquity, which cannot be rejected.

2. He was born in Saragossa, in the kingdom of Aragon. Prudentius, in his famous Hymn, congratulates this city on having produced more saints and martyrs than any other city in Spain. During the persecution under Diocletian, the cruel proconsul Dacian, infamous in the annals of Spanish martyrdom, caused all the Christians of Saragossa, men, women, and children, whom he collected together by a promise of immunity, to be massacred. Among these were the virgin EUGRACIA, and the eighteen Christian cavaliers who attended her to death.

3. At this time lived St. Vincent: he had been early instructed in the Christian faith, and with all the ardor of youth devoted himself to the service of Christ. At the time of the persecution, being not more than twenty years of age, he was already a deacon. The dangers and the sufferings of the Christians only excited his charity and his zeal; and after having encouraged and sustained many of his brethren in the torments inflicted upon them, he was himself called to receive the crown of martyrdom.

4. Being brought before the tribunal of Dacian, together with his bishop, Valerius, they were accused of being Christians and contemners of the gods. Valerius, who was very old, and had an impediment in his speech, answered to the accusation in a voice so low that he could scarcely be heard. On this, St. Vincent burst forth, with Christian fervor,—“How is this, my Father! canst thou not speak aloud, and defy this pagan dog? Speak, that all the world may hear; or suffer me, who am only thy servant, to speak in thy stead!”

5. The bishop having given him leave to speak, St. Vincent stood forth, and proclaimed his faith aloud, defying the tortures with which they were threatened; so that the Christians who were present were lifted up in heart and full of gratitude to God, and the wicked proconsul was in the same degree filled with indignation. He ordered the old bishop to be banished from the city; but Vincent, who had defied him, he reserved as an example to the rest, and was resolved to bend him to submission by the most terrible and ingenious tortures that cruelty could invent.

6. The young saint endured them unflinchingly. When his body was lacerated by iron forks, he only smiled on his tormentors : the pangs they inflicted were to him delights ; thorns were his roses ; the flames a refreshing bath ; death itself was but the entrance to life.

7. They laid him, torn, bleeding, and half consumed by fire, on the ground strewn with potsherds, and left him there ; but God sent down his angels to comfort him ; and when his guards looked into the dungeon, they beheld it filled with light and fragrance ; they heard the angels singing songs of triumph, and the unconquerable martyr pouring forth his soul in hymns of thanksgiving. He even called to his jailers to enter and partake of the celestial delight and solace which had been vouchsafed to him ; and they, being amazed, fell upon their knees and acknowledged the true God.

8. But Dacian, perfidious as he was cruel, began to consider what other means might remain to conquer his unconquerable victim. Having tried tortures in vain, he determined to try seduction. He ordered a bed of down to be prepared, strewn with roses ; commanded the sufferer to be laid upon it, and allowed his friends and disciples to approach him. They, weeping, stanching his wounds, and dipped their kerchiefs in his flowing blood, and kissed his hands and brow, and besought him to live. But the martyr, who had held out through such protracted torments, had no sooner been laid upon the bed, than his pure spirit, disdaining as it were these treacherous indulgences, fled to heaven : the angels received him on their wings, and he entered into bliss eternal and ineffable.

13. THE SEVEN SLEEPERS OF EPHEBUS.

MRS. JAMESON.

1. DURING the persecution under the Emperor Decius, there lived in the city of Ephesus seven young men, who were Christians : their names were Maximian, Malchus, Marcian, Dionysius, John, Serapion, and Constantine ; and as they refused to offer sacrifice to the idols, they were accused before the tribunal. But they fled and escaped to Mount Cœlian, where they hid themselves in a cave. Being discovered, the tyrant ordered that they should roll great stones to the mouth of the cavern, in order that they might die of hunger. They, embracing each other, fell asleep.

2. And it came to pass in the thirtieth year of the reign of the Emperor Theodosius, that there broke out that dangerous heresy which denied the resurrection of the dead. The pious emperor, being greatly afflicted, retired to the interior of his palace, putting on sackcloth and covering his head with ashes: therefore, God took pity on him, and restored his faith by bringing back these just men to life—which came to pass in this manner :

3. A certain inhabitant of Ephesus, repairing to the top of Mount Coelian to build a stable for his cattle, discovered the cavern ; and when the light penetrated therein, the sleepers awoke, believing that their slumbers had only lasted for a single night. They rose up, and Malchus, one of the number, was dispatched to the city to purchase food. He, advancing cautiously and fearfully, beheld to his astonishment the image of the cross surmounting the city gate. He went to another gate, and there he found another cross. He rubbed his eyes, believing himself still asleep, or in a dream ; and entering the city, he heard everywhere the name of Christ pronounced openly : and he was more and more confounded.

4. When he repaired to the baker's, he offered in payment an ancient coin of the time of the Emperor Decius, and they looked at him with astonishment, thinking that he had found a hidden treasure. And when they accused him, he knew not what to reply. Seeing his confusion, they bound him and dragged him through the streets with contumely ; and he looked round, seeking some one whom he knew, but not a face in all the crowd was familiar to him.

5. Being brought before the bishop, the truth was disclosed to the great amazement of all. The bishop, the governor, and the principal inhabitants of the city, followed him to the entrance of the cavern, where the other six youths were found. Their faces had the freshness of roses, and the brightness of a holy light was around them. Theodosius himself, being in formed of this great wonder, hastened to the cavern; and one of the sleepers said to him, "Believe us, O Emperor! for we have been raised before the Day of Judgment, in order that thou mightest trust in the Resurrection of the Dead!" And having said this, they bowed their heads and gave up their spirits to God. They had slept in their cavern for 196 years.

6. Gibbon, in quoting this tradition, observes that it may be traced to within half a century of the date of the miracle. About the end of the sixth century, it was translated from the Syriac into the Latin, and was spread over the whole of western Christendom. Nor was it confined to the Christian world. Mahomet has introduced it, as a divine revelation, into the Koran. It has penetrated into Abyssinia. It has been found in Scandinavia;—in fact, in the remotest regions of the Old World this singular tradition, in one form or another, appears to have been known and accepted.

7. The Seven Sleepers of Ephesus, extended in their cave side by side, occur perpetually in the miniatures, ancient sculpture, and stained glass of the thirteenth and fourteenth centuries. Thus they are represented in the frieze of the chapel of Edward the Confessor, at Westminster. In general, the name of each is written overhead.

14.—TIMES GO BY TURNS.

SOUTHWELL.

ROBERT SOUTHWELL was born, A. D. 1560, and underwent his martyrdom, A. D. 1595. Of all the hundred and twenty-eight Catholic priests put to death in Elizabeth's reign, not one was more worthy of pious commemoration. Descended from an ancient family in Norfolk, he was educated on the Continent, and became a Jesuit at Rome. While on the English mission, he resided chiefly at the house of Anne, countess of Arundel, who lived in the Tower of London. He was thrown into prison in 1592, where he remained three years, during which time he was put on the rack ten several times. Nothing could be proved against him, except what he confessed:—that he was a Catholic priest, and prepared to die for his faith. Such was the condition of the dungeon in which Southwell suffered his long captivity, that his own father petitioned that he might be released from it, although but to die. On the 21st of February, 1595, he was hung, drawn, and quartered at Tyburn, being subjected, during a prolonged death, to those horrible tortures commonly undergone by the martyrs of that reign, tortures to which he replied only by repeatedly making the sign of the cross. Besides his poems, which possess a solid energy of diction, as well as a noble spiritual elevation, Southwell left behind him two works in prose, which abound in beauty and pathos, Mary Magdalene's Funeral Tears, and the Triumphs over Death.

1. THE lopped tree in time may grow again,
Most naked plants renew both fruit and flower;
The sorriest wight may find release of pain,
The driest soil suck in some moistening shower:
Time goes by turns, and chances change by course,
From foul to fair, from better hap to worse.
2. The sea of Fortune doth not ever flow;
She draws her favors to the lowest ebb;
Her tides have equal times to come and go;
Her loom doth weave the fine and coarsest web:
No joy so great but runneth to an end,
No hap so hard but may in fine amend.
3. Not always fall of leaf, nor ever spring;
Not endless night, yet not eternal day;
The saddest birds a season find to sing;
The roughest storm a calm may soon allay.
Thus, with succeeding turns God tempereth all,
That man may hope to rise, yet fear to fall.
4. A chance may win that by mischance was lost;
That net that holds no great takes little fish;
In some things all, in all things none are cross'd;
Few all they need, but none have all they wish.
Unmingled joys here to no man befall;
Who least, hath some; who most, hath never all.

15. CATHOLIC MISSIONS IN THE NORTHWEST.

EXTRACTS FROM BANCROFT'S HISTORY OF THE UNITED STATES.

GEORGE BANCROFT has written the only work that deserves the title of History of the United States. From a Catholic point of view some objections can be made to the first volumes, but on the whole it is a noble monument of the genius of the author and the genius of his country.—D. Brownson.

Bancroft was born at Worcester, Massachusetts, October 3, 1800.

1. Religious zeal not less than commercial ambition had influenced France to recover Canada; and Champlain, its governor, whose imperishable name will rival with posterity the fame of Smith and Hudson, ever disinterested and compassionate, full of honor and probity, of ardent devotion and burning zeal, esteemed "the salvation of a soul worth more than the conquest of an empire."

2. Thus it was neither commercial enterprise nor royal ambition which carried the power of France into the heart of our Continent; the motive was religion. Religious enthusiasm founded Montreal, made a conquest of the wilderness of the upper lakes, and explored the Mississippi. The Roman (Catholic) Church created for Canada its altars, its hospitals, and its seminaries. . . . The first permanent efforts of French enterprise in colonizing America preceded any permanent English settlement on the Potomac.

3. Years before the pilgrims landed in Cape Cod, the Roman (Catholic) Church had been planted, by missionaries from France, in the eastern moiety of Maine; and Le Caron, an unambitious Franciscan, had penetrated the land of the Mohawks, had passed to the north of the hunting-grounds of the Wyandots, and, bound by his vows to the life of a beggar, had, on foot, or paddling a bark canoe, gone onward, and still onward, taking alms of the savages, till he reached the rivers of Lake Huron.

4. While Quebec contained scarcely fifty inhabitants, priests of the Franciscan Order—Le Caron, Fiel, Lagard—had labored for years as missionaries in Upper Canada, or made their way to the neutral Huron tribe that dwelt on the waters of the Niagara.

5. To confirm the missions, the first measure was the establishment of a college in New France, and the parents of the Marquis de Gamache, pleased with his pious importunity, assented to his entering the Order of the Jesuits, and added from their ample fortunes the means of endowing a Seminary for education at Quebec. Its foundation was laid, under happy auspices, in 1635, just before Champlain passed from among the living; and two years before the emigration of John Harward, and one year before the General Court of Massachusetts had made provisions for a College.

6. The fires of charity were at the same time enkindled. The Duchess D'Aguillon, aided by her uncle, the Cardinal Richelieu, endowed a public hospital dedicated to the Son of God, whose blood was shed in mercy for all mankind. Its doors were opened, not only to the sufferers among the emigrants, but to the maimed, the sick, and the blind, of any of the numerous tribes between the Kennebec and Lake Superior; it relieved misfortune without asking its lineage. From the hospital nuns of Dieppe, three were selected, the youngest but twenty-two, to brave the famine and rigors of Canada in their patient mission of benevolence.

7. The same religious enthusiasm, inspiring Madame de la Peltier, a young and opulent widow of Alençon, with the aid of a nun of Dieppe and two others from Tours, established the Ursuline Convent for girls. . . . Is it wonderful that the natives were touched by a benevolence which their poverty and squalid misery could not appall? Their education was attempted; and the venerable ash-tree still lives beneath which Mary of the Incarnation, so famed for chastened piety, genius, and good judgment, toiled, though in vain, for the education of the Huron children.

8. The life of the missionary on Lake Huron was simple and uniform. The earliest hours, from four to eight, were absorbed in private prayer. The day was given to schools, visits, instructions in the catechism, and a service for proselytes. Sometimes, after the manner of St. Francis Xavier, Brebeuf would walk through the village and its environs ringing a little bell, and inviting the Huron braves and counsellors to a conference. There, under the shady forest, the most solemn mysteries of the Catholic faith were subject to discussion.

9. Yet the efforts of the Jesuits were not limited to the Huron race. Within thirteen years, the remote wilderness was visited by forty-two missionaries, members of the Society of Jesus, besides eighteen others, who, if not initiated, were yet chosen men, ready to shed their blood for their faith. Twice or thrice a year they all assembled at St. Mary's; during the rest of the time they were scattered through the infidel tribes.

10. The first missionaries among the Hurons—Fathers De Brebeuf, Daniel, and Lallemand—all fell glorious martyrs to their devoted zeal. . . . Father Reymbault soon after fell a victim to the climate, and died in Quebec (1642). His associate, Father Jogues, who with him had first planted the cross in Michigan, was reserved for a still more disastrous, though glorious, fate. He was taken prisoner by the fierce Mohawks, and was made to run the gauntlet at three different Mohawk villages.

11. For days and nights he was abandoned to hunger and every torment which petulant youth could contrive. But yet there was consolation;—an ear of Indian corn on the stalk was thrown to the good Father; and see, to the broad blade were clung little drops of dew, or of water—enough to baptize two captive neophytes. He had expected death; but the Mohawks, satisfied, perhaps, with his sufferings, or awed at his sanctity, spared his life, and his liberty was enlarged.

12. On a hill apart, he carved a long cross on a tree; and here, in the solitude, meditated the Imitation of Christ, and soothed his griefs by reflecting that he alone, in that vast region, adored the true God of earth and heaven. Roaming through the stately forests of the Mohawk valley, he wrote the name Jesus on the bark of trees, engraved the cross, and entered into possession of these countries in the name of God—often raising up his voice in a solitary chant. Thus did France bring her banner and its faith to the confines of Albany. The missionary himself was humanely ransomed from captivity by the Dutch, and sailing for France, soon returned to Canada.

13. Similar was the fate of Father Bressani. Taken prisoner while on his way to the Hurons; beaten, mangled, mutilated; driven barefoot over rough paths, through briers and thickets; scourged by a whole village; burned, tortured, wounded, and mangled;—he was an eye-witness to the fate of one of his companions, who was boiled and eaten. Yet some mysterious awe protected his life, and he, too, was humanely rescued by the Dutch,

16. CATHOLIC MISSIONS—continued.

1. IN 1655, Fathers Chaumont and Dablon were sent on a mission among the tribes of New York. They were hospitably welcomed at Onondaga, the principal village of that tribe. A general convention was held at their desire; and before the multitudinous assembly of the chiefs and the whole people gathered under the open sky, among the primeval forests, the presents were delivered; and the Italian Jesuit, with much gesture after the Italian manner, discoursed so eloquently to the crowd, that it seemed to Dablon as if the word of God had been preached to all the nations of that land. On the next day, the chiefs and others crowded round the Jesuits with their songs of welcome.

2. "Happy land," they sang, "happy land, in which the Jesuits are to dwell!" and the chief led the chorus, "Glad tidings! glad tidings! It is well that we have spoken together: it is well that we have a heavenly message." At once a chapel sprung into existence, and by the zeal of the nation was finished in a day. "For marble and precious stones," writes Dablon, "we employed only bark; but the path to heaven is as open through a roof of bark as through arched ceilings of silver and gold." The savages showed themselves susceptible of the excitements of religious ecstasy, and there, in the heart of New York, the solemn services of the Roman (Catholic) Church were chanted as securely as in any part of Christendom.

3. The Cayugas also desired a missionary, and they received the fearless René Mesnard. In their village a chapel was erected, with mats for the tapestry; and there the picture of the Saviour and of the Virgin mother were unfolded to the admiring children of the wilderness. The Oneidas also listened to the missionary; and early in 1657, Chaumont reached the most fertile and densely peopled lands of the Senecas. The Jesuit priests published their faith from the Mohawk to the Genesee. The Mission stretched westward along Lake Superior to the waters of the Mississippi. Two young fur-traders, having travelled to the West five hundred leagues, returned in 1656, attended by a number of savages from the Mississippi valley, who demanded missionaries for their country.

4. Their request was eagerly granted; and Gabriel Dreuilletes, the same who carried the cross through the forests of Maine, and Leonard Gareau, of old a missionary among the Hurons, were selected as the first religious envoys to a land of sacrifices, shadows, and deaths. The canoes are launched; the tawny warriors embark; the oars flash, and words of triumph and joy mingle with their last adieus. But just below Montreal, a band of Mohawks, enemies to the Ottawas, awaited the convoy: in the affray Gareau was mortally wounded, and the fleet dispersed.

5. But the Jesuits were still fired with zeal to carry the cross westward. "If the Five Nations," they said, "can penetrate these regions, to satiate their passion for blood; if mercantile enterprise can bring furs from the plains of the Sioux; why cannot the cross be borne to their cabins!" The zeal of Francis de Laval, the Bishop of Quebec, kindled with a desire himself to enter on the mission; but the lot fell to René Mesnard. He was charged to visit Green Bay and Lake Superior, and on a convenient point to establish a residence as a common place of assembly for the surrounding nations.

6. His departure was immediate (A. D. 1660), and with few preparations; for he trusted—such are his words—"in the Providence which feeds the little birds of the desert, and clothes the wild flowers of the forests." Every personal motive seemed to retain him in Quebec; but powerful instincts impelled him to the enterprise. Obedient to his vows, the aged man entered on the path that was red with the blood of his predecessors, and made haste to scatter the seeds of truth through the wilderness, even though the sower cast his seed in weeping. "In three or four months," he wrote to a friend, "you may add me to the memento of deaths."

7. His prediction was verified. Several months after, while his attendant was employed in the labor of transporting the canoe, he was lost in the forest, and never seen more. Long afterwards, his cassock and breviary were kept as amulets among the Sioux. Similar was the death of the great Father Marquette, the discoverer of the Mississippi. Joliet returned to Quebec to announce the discovery. The unaspiring Marquette remained to preach the gospel to the Miamis, who dwelt in the north of Illinois around Chicago. Two years afterwards (A. D. 1675), sailing from Chicago to Mackinaw, he entered a little river in Michigan.

8. Erecting an altar, he said mass after the rites of the Catholic Church ; then, begging the men who conducted his canoe to leave him alone for a half-hour,

“In the darkling wood,
Amid the cool and silence, he knelt down
And offered to the Mightiest solemn thanks
And supplication.”

At the end of half an hour they went to seek him, and he was no more. The good missionary, discoverer of a new world, had fallen asleep on the margin of the stream which bears his name. Near its mouth the canoe-men dug his grave in the sand. Ever after, the forest rangers, if in danger on Lake Michigan, would invoke his name. The people of the West will build his monument.

17. MARY STUART'S LAST PRAYER.

SMYTHE.

HON. J. G. SMYTHE has written some of the sweetest ballads in the English language ; those particularly in connection with the House of Stuart are distinguished for their beauty and pathos.

1. A LONELY mourner kneels in prayer before the Virgin's fane
With white hands clasp'd for Jesus' sake—so her prayer may not be vain ;
Wan is her cheek, and very pale—her voice is low and faint
And tears are in her eyes the while she makes her humble plaint :
Oh, little could you deem, from her sad and humble mien,
That she was once the Bride of France, and still was Scot land's Queen !

2. "O Mary mother! Mary mother! be my help and stay!
Be with me still as thou hast been, and strengthen me
to-day;
For many a time, with heavy heart, all weary of its grief,
I solace sought in thy blest thought, and ever found relief:
For thou, too, wert a Queen on earth, and men were harsh to thee!
And cruel things and rude they said, as they have said to me!
3. "Oh, gentlemen of Scotland! oh, cavaliers of France!
How each and all had grasp'd his sword and seized his angry lance,
If lady-love, or sister dear, or nearer, dearer bride,
Had been like me, your friendless liege, insulted and belied!
But these are sinful thoughts, and sad—I should not mind me now
Of faith forsworn, or broken pledge, or false or fruitless yow!
4. "But thou, dear Mary—Mary mine! hast ever look'd the same,
With pleasant mien and smile serene, on her who bore thy name:
Oh, grant that when anon I go to death, I may not see
Nor axe, nor block, nor headsman—but thee, and only thee!
Then 'twill be told, in coming times, how Mary gave her grace
To die as Stuart, Guise, should die—of Charlemagne's fearless race!"
-

18. THE DISCOVERY OF AMERICA.

THOMAS D'ARCY MCGEE.

T. D. MCGEE is a native of Carlingford, county Louth, Ireland. Though still comparatively young, he has achieved an immense amount of literary labor. As an orator he has few, if any, superiors at the present day. As a prose writer his works are chiefly historical and biographical, many of them possessing a high order of merit, such as his Popular History of Ireland, Irish Settlers in America, Catholic History of America, Gallery of Irish Writers, &c., &c. As a statesman and politician he has already attained the first rank in the Canadian House of Assembly, where he represents the city of Montreal.

1 IN the foreground of American history there stand these three figures—a lady, a sailor, and a monk. Might they not be thought to typify Faith, Hope, and Charity? The lady is especially deserving of honor. Years after his first success, the Admiral (Columbus) wrote: “In the midst of general incredulity, the Almighty infused into the Queen, my lady, the spirit of intelligence and energy. While every one else, in his ignorance, was expatiating on the cost and inconvenience, her Highness approved of it on the contrary, and gave it all the support in her power.”

2. And what were the distinguishing qualities of this foster-mother of American discovery? Fervent piety, unfeigned humility, profound reverence for the Holy See, a spotless life as a daughter, mother, wife, and queen. “She is,” says a Protestant author, “one of the purest and most beautiful characters in the pages of history.” Her holy life had won for her the title of “the Catholic.” Other queens have been celebrated for beauty, for magnificence, for learning, or for good fortune; but the foster-mother of America alone, of all the women of history, is called “the Catholic.”

3. As to the conduct of the undertaking, we have first to remark, that on the port of Palos the original outfit depended, and Palos itself depended on the neighboring convent. In the refectory of La Rabida the agreement was made between Columbus and the Pinzons. From the porch of the Church of St George, the royal orders were read to the astonished townsfolk.

4. The aids and assurances of religion were brought into requisition to encourage sailors, always a superstitious generation, to embark on this mysterious voyage. On the morning of their departure, a temporary chapel was erected with spars and sails on the strand; and there, in sight of their vessels riding at shortened anchors, the three crews, numbering in all one hundred and twenty souls, received the blessed sacrament. Rising from their knees, they departed with the benediction of the Church, like the breath of heaven, filling their sails.

19. THE DISCOVERY OF AMERICA—continued.

1. ON the night before the discovery of the first land, after the Salve Regina had been chanted, according to his biographers, the Admiral made an impressive address to his crew. His speech must have been one of the most Catholic orations ever delivered in the New World. It has not been recorded; it can never be invented. We can, indeed, conceive what a lofty homily on confidence in God and His ever Blessed Mother such a man so situated would be able to deliver.

2. We can imagine we see him as he stands on the darkened deck of the Santa Maria, his thin locks lifted by the breeze already odorous of land, and his right hand pointing onward to the west. "We almost hear him exclaim, "Yonder lies the land! Where you can see only night and vacancy, I behold India and Cathay! The darkness of the hour will pass away, and with it the night of nations. Cities more beautiful than Seville, countries more fertile than Andalusia, are off yonder.

3. "There lies the terrestrial paradise, watered with its four rivers of life; there lies the golden Ophir, from which Solomon, the son of David, drew the ore that adorned the temple of the living God; there we shall find whole nations unknown to Christ, to whom you, ye favored companions of my voyage, shall be the first to bring the glad tidings of great joy proclaimed 'of old by angels' lips to the shepherds of Chaldea.'" But, alas! who shall attempt to supply the words spoken by such a man at such a moment, on that last night of expectation and uncertainty—the eve of the birthday of a new world?

4. Columbus and his companions landed on the morning of the 12th of October, 1492, on the little island which they called San Salvador. Three boats conveyed them to the shore; over each boat floated a broad banner, blazoned with "a green cross." On reaching the land the Admiral threw himself on his knees, kissed the earth, and shed tears of joy. Then, raising his voice, he uttered aloud that short but fervent prayer, which, after him, all Catholic discoverers were wont to repeat.

5. It is in these words : " O Lord God, Eternal and Omnipotent, who by thy Divine Word hast created the heavens, the earth, and the sea, blessed and glorified be thy name, and praised thy majesty, who hast deigned, by me, thy humble servant, to have that sacred name made known and preached in this other part of the world !"

6. The nomenclature used by the great discoverer, like all his acts, is essentially Catholic. Neither his own nor his patron's name is precipitated on cape, river, or island. San Salvador, Santa Trinidad, San Domingo, San Nicolas, San Jago, Santa Maria, Santa Marta—these are the mementoes of his first success. All egotism, all selfish policy, was utterly lost in the overpowering sense of being but an instrument in the hands of Providence.

7. After cruising a couple of months among the Bahamas, and discovering many new islands, he returns to Spain. In this homeward voyage two tempests threaten to engulf his solitary ship. In the darkest hour he supplicates our Blessed Lady, his dear patroness. He vows a pilgrimage barefoot to her nearest shrine, whatever land he makes ; a vow punctually fulfilled. Safely he reaches the Azores, the Tagus, and the port of Palos. His first act is a solemn procession to the church of St. George, from which the royal orders had been first made known.

8. He next writes in this strain to the Treasurer Sanchez : " Let processions be made, let festivities be held, let churches be filled with branches and flowers, for Christ rejoices on earth as in heaven, seeing the future redemption of souls." The court was, at the time, at Barcelona, and thither he repaired with the living evidences of his success. Seated on the royal dais, with the aborigines, the fruits, flowers, birds, and metals spread out before them, he told to princes his wondrous tale.

9. As soon as he had ended, " the King and Queen, with all present, prostrated themselves on their knees in grateful thanksgiving, while the solemn strains of the Te Deum were poured forth by the choir of the royal chapel as in commemoration of some great victory !" To place beyond any supposition of doubt the Catholicity of this extraordinary event, one evidence is still wanting—the official participation of the sovereign Pontiff. That it had from the outset.

20. THE VIRGIN MARY'S KNIGHT.

A BALLAD OF THE CRUSADES.

THOS. D'ARCY MCGEE.

[In "the middle ages," there were orders of knights especially devoted to our Blessed Lady, as well as many illustrious individuals of knightly rank and renown. Thus the order called Servites, in France, was known as les esclaves de Marie; and there was also the order of "Our Lady of Mercy," for the redemption of captives; the Templars, too, before their fall, were devoutly attached to the service of our Blessed Lady.]

1. BENEATH the stars in Palestine seven knights discoursing stood,
But not of warlike work to come, nor former fields of blood,
Nor of the joy the pilgrims feel prostrated far, who see
The hill where Christ's atoning blood pour'd down the penal tree;
Their theme was old, their theme was new, 'twas sweet and yet 'twas bitter,—
Of noble ladies left behind spoke cavalier and ritter,
And eyes grew bright, and sighs arose from every iron breast,
For a dear wife, or plighted maid, far in the widow'd
West.
2. Toward the knights came Constantine, thrice noble by his birth,
And ten times nobler than his blood his high out-shining worth;
His step was slow, his lips were moved, though not a word
he spoke,
Till a gallant lord of Lombardy his spell of silence broke.
"What aileth thee, O Constantine, that solitude you seek?
If counsel or if aid you need, we pray thee do but speak;

Or dost thou mourn, like other freres, thy lady-love afar,
Whose image shineth nightly through yon European star?"

3. Then answer'd courteous Constantine—" Good sir, in simple truth,

I chose a gracious lady in the hey-day of my youth ;
I wear her image on my heart, and when that heart is cold,
The secret may be rifled thence, but never must be told.
For her I love and worship well by light of morn or even,
I ne'er shall see my mistress dear, until we meet in heaven ;
But this believe, brave cavaliers, there never was but one Such lady as my Holy Love, beneath the blessed sun."

4. He ceased, and pass'd with solemn step on to an olive grove,
And, kneeling there, he pray'd a prayer to the lady of his love.

And many a cavalier whose lance had still maintain'd his own

Beloved to reign without a peer, all earth's unequalled one,
Look'd tenderly on Constantine in camp and in the fight ;
With wonder and with generous pride they mark'd the lightning light

Of his fearless sword careering through the unbelievers' ranks,

As angry Rhone sweeps off the vines that thicken on his banks.

5. " He fears not death, come when it will ; he longeth for his love,

And fain would find some sudden path to where she dwells above.

How should he fear for dying, when his mistress dear is dead?"

Thus often of Sir Constantine his watchful comrades said ;
Until it chanced from Zion wall the fatal arrow flew,
That pierced the outworn armor of his faithful bosom
through ;

And never was such mourning made for knight in Palestine,
As thy loyal comrades made for thee, belovèd Constantine.

6. Beneath the royal tent the bier was guarded night and day,
Where with a halo round his head the Christian champion
lay ;

That talisman upon his breast—what may that marvel be
Which kept his ardent soul through life from every error free?
Approach ! behold ! nay, worship there the image of his love,
The heavenly Queen who reigneth all the sacred hosts above,
Nor wonder that around his bier there lingers such a light,
For the spotless one that sleepeth was the Blessed Virgin's Knight !

21. THE YOUNG CATHOLIC.

ABBÉ MARTINEZ.

ABBÉ MARTINEZ—a native of France. His writings bear the stamp of the French national genius. His works are worthy of being ranked next to those of Moehler and Balmez. His "Religion in Society," as a popular manual against the discordant but numerous errors of the day, is unrivalled.

1. WHAT commands his attention most in the temple, is the mysterious person of the priest, the spiritual father of the whole parish, and with whom he is about to form the most intimate relations,—at catechism, where, during many years, he is to receive, with children of his own age, the milk of the divine word ; or in the confessional, where he will reveal the most secret movements of his heart.

2. It is to the priest he is indebted—and he is reminded of it by the sight of the sacred font—for the sublime title of the child of God and of the Church ; it is from his sacred hand that he awaits the mysterious sacrament which is to unite him intimately to his Creator. Great is the influence of his pastor over his spiritual children. Napoleon, on his death-bed, confessed to his companions in exile, that the presence of the priest had always spoken to his heart. Here let every one recall the impression of his early days.

3. But to the eye of the young Catholic, the religious horizon extends, and gradually reveals itself with age.

Around his parish other parishes are gathered. The common father of priests and people—the priest emphatically —the bishop, appears in the midst of joyful chants. His sacred hand touches the young brow, and the union, before so close, of our youth with the mystical body of the Church becomes still closer. -

4. Beyond and above bishops, universal veneration points out to him the Bishop of bishops, the universal pontiff, seated upon the immovable chair of St Peter, and forming of the one hundred and sixty millions of Catholics, scattered throughout the world, one only body, animated with the same spirit, nourished with the same doctrine, moving towards the same end.

5. He sees in the clear light of history this vast society, which no visible hand has formed or supports; and for the destruction of which, all the known forces of the physical and moral world have conspired,—surviving all human societies, resisting the most frightful tempests, and constantly bringing the immense majority of Christians into subjection to its laws so unyielding to the passions of men.

6. Who are the enemies, in every age, rising up against the House of the living God? He sees odious tyrants, the enemies of all restraint; proud dreamers, who pretend to substitute their thought of a day for universal faith; sectarians without a past, without a future, with no tie to bind them to each other but their common hatred to Catholic society;—and all confessing, by the name they bear, their descent from one man, and their religious illegitimacy.

7. What a powerful guarantee against the assaults of doubt is presented to the young Catholic by this fact, which is as clear as the sun, and the evidence of which is more convincing every step we advance in the knowledge of the present and the past. He cannot refuse to believe in the Church, without saying: “In matters of religion I see more plainly, I alone, than a hundred and sixty millions of my cotemporaries and the eight or ten thousand millions of Catholics who preceded me, all as interested as I am in knowing the truth, and most of them with better advantages of becoming acquainted with it.”

22. THE CHILDREN OF THE POOR.

L A M B.

CHARLES LAMB, a native of England, died in 1834, aged 59. He was both a prose and poetical writer, but his fame rests chiefly on his Essays of ELIA; these are distinguished by a most delicate vein of humor and exquisite pathos. The following extract is from a series of his papers, written with much humor and taste, against the truth of certain popular proverbs—the subject in the present instance being, “Home is homē, be it ever so homely.”

1 THE innocent prattle of his children takes out the sting of a man's poverty. But the children of the very poor do not prattle. It is none of the least frightful features in that condition, that there is no childishness in its dwellings. “Poor people,” said a sensible old nurse to us once, “do not bring up their children; they drag them up.” The little careless darling of the wealthier nursery, in their hovel, is transformed betimes into a premature, reflecting person. No one has time to dandle it, no one thinks it worth while to coax it, to soothe it, to toss it up and down, to humor it. There is none to kiss away its tears. If it cries, it can only be beaten.

2. It has been prettily said that “a babe is fed with milk and praise.” But the aliment of this poor babe was thin, un-nourishing; the return to its little baby tricks, and efforts to engage attention, bitter, ceaseless objurgation. It never had a toy, or knew what a coral meant. It grew up without the lullaby of nurses; it was a stranger to the patient fondle, the hushing caress, the attracting novelty, the costlier plaything or the cheaper off-hand contrivance to divert the child, the prattled nonsense (best sense to it), the wise impertinences, the wholesome fictions, the apt. story interposed, that puts a stop to present sufferings, and awakens the passions of young wonder.

3. It was never sung to; no one ever told it a tale of the nursery. It was dragged up, to live or to die as it happened. It had no young dreams. It broke at once into the iron realities of life. A child exists not for the very poor as an object of dalliance; it is only another mouth to be fed, a pair of little hands to be betimes inured to labor. It is the rival, till it can be the co-operator, for food with the parent. It is never his mirth, his diversion, his solace ; it never makes him young again, with recalling his young times. The children of the very poor have no young times.

4. It makes the very heart to bleed to overhear the casual street-talk between a poor woman and her little girl, a woman of the better sort of poor, in a condition rather above the squalid beings which we have been contemplating. It is not of toys, of nursery books, of summer holidays (fitting that age), of the promised sight or play, of praised sufficiency at school. It is of mangling and clear-starching, of the price of coals, or of potatoes. The questions of the child, that should be the very outpourings of curiosity in idleness, are marked with forecast and melancholy providence. It has come to be a woman—before it was a child. It has learned to go to market ; it chaffers, it haggles, it envies, it murmurs ; it is knowing, acute, sharpened ; it never prattles. Had we not reason to say, that the home of the very poor is no home ?

23. MY LIFE IS LIKE THE SUMMER ROSE.

WILDE.

R. H. WILDE was born in 1789 ; he passed his childhood in Baltimore, and subsequently removed to Georgia ; and, although engaged in law and political life, devoted a sufficient portion of his time to literature to make it evident that he had the talents to assume a proud position in its ranks. He died, in 1847, a most edifying death, in the bosom of the Catholic Church.

1. My life is like the Summer rose,
 That opens to the morning sky,
 But ere the shades of evening close,
 Is scatter'd on the ground to die!
 Yet on the humble rose's bed,
 The sweetest dews of night are shed ;
 As if she wept the waste to see ;—
 But none shall weep a tear for me!

2. My life is like the Autumn leaf
 That trembles in the moon's pale ray ;

Its hold is frail, its date is brief,
 Restless, and soon to pass away!
 Yet ere that leaf shall fall and fade,
 The parent tree will mourn its shade,
 The winds bewail the leafless tree,—
 But none shall breathe a sigh for me!

3. My life is like the prints, which feet
 Have left on Tampa's desert strand,
 Soon as the rising tide shall beat,
 All trace will vanish from the sand!
 Yet, as if grieving to efface
 All vestige of the human race,
 On that lone shore loud moans the sea,—
 But none, alas, shall mourn for me!
-

24. THE BLESSED SACRAMENT.

FABER.

FREDERICK WILLIAM FABER, one of the Oxford divines, is a man of great literary attainments. His works, "Growth in Holiness," "Blessed Sacrament," "Mary at the Foot of the Cross," and the "Conferences," show that he is eminently an ascetic writer. He is also a poet of high order:—"The Cheswell Water-Lily," "Sir Launcelot," "Rosary," "Styrian Lake," and many other poems, rank among the noblest and purest of the English bards; he awakens anew the lyre of the martyr Southwell and the pious Canon Crashaw.—Metropolitan.

1. LET us suppose it to be the Feast of Corpus Christi. We have risen with one glad thought uppermost in our minds. It gives a color to every thing around about us. It is health to us even if we are not well, and sunshine though the skies be dull. At first there is something of disappointment to us, when we see our dear country wearing the same toilsome look of commonplace labor and of ordinary traffic. We feel there is something wrong, something out of harmony in this.

2. Poor London! if it knew God, and could keep holydays for God, how it might rejoice on such a day, letting the chains of work fall from off its countless slaves of Mammon, and giving one whole sun to the deep, childlike joy in a mystery which is the triumph of faith over sight, of spirit over matter, of grace over nature, and of the Church over the world. But somehow our very disappointment causes us to feel more touchingly the gift of faith, and the sense of our own unworthiness, which makes it such a wonder that God should have elected us to so great a gift.

3. Oh, sweet Sacrament of Love! we belong to thee, for thou art our Living Love himself. Thou art our well of life, for in thee is the Divine Life himself—immeasurable, compassionate, eternal. To-day is thy day, and on it there shall not be a single thought, a single hope, a single wish, which shall not be all for thee!

4. Now the first thing we have to do is to get the spirit of the Feast into us. When this is once accomplished, we shall be better able to sound some of the depths of this salutary mystery. Nay, the whole theology of the grand dogma of the Eucharist is nothing less than angelic music made audible to mortal ears; and when our souls are attuned to it we shall the better understand the sweet secrets which it reveals to our delighted minds.

5. But we must go far away in order to catch the spirit of the Feast. We must put before ourselves, as on a map, the aspect which the whole Church is presenting to the eye of God to-day. Our great city is deafened with her own noise; she cannot hear. She is blinded with her own dazzle; she cannot see. We must not mind her; we must put the thoughts of her away, with sadness if it were any other day than this, but to-day, because it is to-day, with complete indifference.

6. Oh, the joy of the immense glory the Church is sending up to God this hour, verily, as if the world was all unfallen still! We think, and as we think, the thoughts are like so many successive tide-waves, filling our whole souls with the fulness of delight, of all the thousands of masses which are being said or sung the whole world over, and all rising with one note of blissful acclamation from grateful creatures to the Majesty of our merciful Creator.

7. How many glorious processions, with the sun upon their banners, are now winding their way round the squares of mighty cities, through the flower-strewn streets of Christian villages, through the antique cloisters of the glorious cathedral, or through the grounds of the devout seminary, where the various colors of the faces, and the different languages of the people, are only so many fresh tokens of the unity of that faith which they are all exultingly professing in the single voice of the magnificent ritual of Rome !

8. Upon how many altars of various architecture, amid sweet flowers and starry lights, amid clouds of humble incense, and the tumult of thrilling song, before thousands of prostrate worshippers, is the blessed sacrament raised for exposition, or taken down for benediction ! And how many blessed acts of faith and love, of triumph and of reparation, do not each of these things surely represent !

9. The world over, the summer air is filled with the voice of song. The gardens are shorn of their fairest blossoms, to be flung beneath the feet of the Sacramental God. The steeples are reeling with the clang of bells ; the cannon are booming in the gorges of the Andes and the Apennines ; the ships of the harbors are painting the bays of the sea with their show of gaudy flags ; the pomp of royal or republican armies salutes the King of kings.

10. The Pope on his throne, and the school-girl in her village, cloistered nuns and sequestered hermits, bishops and dignitaries and preachers, emperors and kings and princes, are all engrossed to-day with the Blessed Sacrament. Cities are illuminated ; the dwellings of men are alive with exultation.

11. Joy so abounds, that men rejoice they know not why ; and their joy overflows on sad hearts, and on the poor and the imprisoned and the wandering and the orphaned and the homesick exiles. All the millions of souls that belong to the royal family and spiritual lineage of St. Peter, are to-day engaged, more or less, with the Blessed Sacrament, so that the whole Church militant is thrilling with glad emotion, like the tremulous rocking of the mighty sea. Sin seems forgotten ; tears even are of rapture rather than of penance. It is like the soul's first day in heaven, or as if earth itself were passing into heaven, as it well might do, for sheer joy of the Blessed Sacrament.

25. THE BLIND MARTYR.

CARDINAL WISEMAN.

His Eminence CARDINAL WISEMAN, the first Archbishop of Westminster, was born at Seville, in Spain, of Irish parents, August 2, 1802. He was ordained priest in 1825, and was for some years Rector of the English College at Rome. He was elevated to the episcopate in 1840, being made Co-adjutor to Dr. Walsh, Vicar Apostolic of the Midland District. In 1848, he was made Pro-Vicar Apostolic of the London District, on the death of Dr. Griffiths; and subsequently, Vicar Apostolic. On the 29th of September, 1850, his Holiness Pope Pius IX. re-established the Catholic Hierarchy in England, when Dr. Wiseman was made Archbishop of the new See of Westminster; and on the following day he was raised to the dignity of a Cardinal Priest of the Holy Roman Church.

"Few of the great men of our day will, in the pages of Church history, occupy a more conspicuous place than Cardinal Wiseman, as a learned and brilliant controversialist, or as a writer abounding in erudition, a knowledge of the Oriental languages, manners, and customs, the life of the primitive Christians, and all their remains, as well as in a thorough knowledge alike of theology, and of the times in which he lived. His Lectures on Revealed Religion are acknowledged to be the best and most complete answer in the language to the infidel doctrines of the day."—Metropolitan.

These form but a small portion of his learned labors. We give below an extract from his unequalled tale of "Fabiola," the scene of which is laid in Rome during the reign of the tyrant Diocletian.

[Cæcilia, a poor, blind young girl, warns the Christians, who had assembled in the Catacombs to assist at the Holy Sacrifice of the Mass, that they have been betrayed to the Prefect of Rome.]

1. CÆCELIA, already forewarned, had approached the cemetery by a different but neighboring entrance. No sooner had she descended than she snuffed the strong odor of the torches. "This is none of our incense, I know," she said to herself; "the enemy is already within." She hastened, therefore, to the place of assembly, and delivered Sebastian's note; adding also what she had observed. It warned them to disperse, and seek the shelter of the inner and lower galleries; and begged of the Pontiff not to leave till he should send for him, as his person was particularly sought for.

2. Pancratius urged the blind messenger to save herself too. "No," she replied, "my office is to watch the door, and guide the faithful safe."

"But the enemy may seize you."

"No matter," she answered, laughing; "my being taken may save much worthier lives. Give me a lamp, Pancratius."

3. "Why, you cannot see by it," observed he, smiling.

"True ; but others can."

"They may be your enemies."

"Even so," she answered ; "I do not wish to be taken in the dark. If my Bridegroom come to me in the night of this cemetery, must he not find me with my lamp trimmed ?"

Off she started, reached her post, and hearing no noise except that of quiet footsteps, she thought they were those of friends, and held up her lamp to guide them.

4. When the party came forth, with their only captive, Fulvius was perfectly furious. It was more than a total failure—it was ridiculous—a poor mouse come out of the bowels of the earth. He rallied Corvinus till the wretch winced and foamed ; then suddenly he asked, "And where is Torquatus ?" He heard the account of his sudden disappearance, told in as many ways as the Dacian guards' adventures ; but it annoyed him greatly. He had no doubt, whatever, in his own mind, that he had been duped by his supposed victim, who had escaped into the unsearchable mazes of the cemetery. If so, this captive would know, and he determined to question her. He stood before her, therefore, put on his most searching and awful look, and said to her, sternly, "Look at me, woman, and tell me the truth."

5. "I must tell you the truth without looking at you, sir," answered the poor girl, with her cheerfulest smile, and softest voice ; "do you not see that I am blind ?"

"Blind !" all exclaimed at once, as they crowded to look at her. But over the features of Fulvius there passed the slightest possible emotion, just as much as the wave that runs, pursued by a playful breeze, over the ripe meadow. A knowledge had flashed into his mind, a clue had fallen into his hands.

6. "It will be ridiculous," he said, "for twenty soldiers to march through the city, guarding a blind girl. Return to your quarters, and I will see you are well rewarded. You, Corvinus, take my horse, and go before to your father, and tell him all. I will follow in a carriage with the captive."

"No treachery, Fulvius," he said, vexed and mortified.

7. "Mind you bring her. The day must not pass without a sacrifice."

"Do not fear," was the reply.

Fulvius, indeed, was pondering whether, having lost one spy, he should not try to make another. But the calm gentleness of the poor beggar perplexed him more than the boisterous zeal of the gamester, and her sightless orbs defied him more than the restless roll of the toper's ; still, the first thought that had struck him he could still pursue. When alone in a carriage with her, he assumed a soothing tone, and addressed her. He knew she had not overheard the last dialogue.

"My poor girl," he said, "how long have you been blind?"

8. "All my life," she replied.

"What is your history? Whence do you come?"

"I have no history. My parents were poor, and brought me to Rome, when I was four years old, as they came to pray, in discharge of a vow made for my life in early sickness, to the blessed martyrs Chrysanthus and Daria. They left me in charge of a pious lame woman, at the door of the title of Fasciola, while they went to their devotions. It was on that memorable day when many Christians were buried at the tomb, by earth and stones cast down on them. My parents had the happiness to be among them."

9. "And how have you lived since?"

"God became my only Father then, and his Catholic Church my Mother. The one feeds the birds of the air, the other nurses the weaklings of the flock. I have never wanted for any thing since."

"But you can walk about the streets freely and without fear, as well as if you saw."

"How do you know that?"

10. "I have seen you. Do you remember very early one morning in the autumn, leading a poor lame man along the Vicus Patricus?"

She blushed and remained silent. Could he have seen her put into the poor old man's purse her own share of the alms? "You have owned yourself a Christian?" he asked, negligently.

11. "Oh, yes ; how could I deny it ?"

"Then that meeting was a Christian meeting ?"

"Certainly ; what else could it be ?"

He wanted no more ; his suspicions were verified. Agnes, about whom Torquatus had been able or willing to tell him nothing, was certainly a Christian. His game was made. She must yield, or he would be avenged.

12. After a pause, looking at her steadfastly, he said, "Do you know whither you are going ?"

"Before the judge of earth, I suppose, who will send me to my Spouse in heaven."

"And so calmly ?" he asked, in surprise ; for he could see no token from the soul to the countenance but a smile.

"So joyfully, rather," was her brief reply.

13. Having got all that he desired, he consigned his prisoner to Corvinus at the gates of the Æmilian basilica, and left her to her fate. It had been a cold and drizzling day, like the preceding evening. The weather, and the incidents of the night, had kept down all enthusiasm ; and while the prefect had been compelled to sit in-doors, where no great crowd could collect, as hours had passed away without any arrest, trial, or tidings, most of the curious had left, and only a few more persevering remained past the hour of afternoon recreation in the public gardens. But just before the captive arrived a fresh knot of spectators came in, and stood near one of the side-doors, from which they could see all.

26. THE BLIND MARTYR—continued.

1. As Corvinus had prepared his father for what he was to expect, Tertullus, moved with some compassion, and imagining there could be little difficulty in overcoming the obstinacy of a poor, ignorant, blind beggar, requested the spectators to remain perfectly still, that he might try his persuasion on her, alone, as she would imagine, with him ; and he threatened heavy penalties on any one who should presume to break the silence.

2. "What is thy name, child?"

"Cæcelia."

"It is a noble name; hast thou it from thy family?"

"No; I am not noble; except because my parents, though poor, died for Christ. As I am blind, those who took care of me called me Cæca,* and then, out of kindness, softened it into Cæcelia."

3. "But, now, give up all this folly of the Christians, who have kept thee only poor and blind. Honor the decrees of the divine emperors, and offer sacrifice to the gods; and thou shalt have riches, and fine clothes, and good fare; and the best physicians shall try to restore thee thy sight."

"You must have better motives to propose to me than these; for the very things for which I most thank God and his Divine Son, are those which you would have me put away."

4. "How dost thou mean?"

"I thank God that I am poor and meanly clad, and fare not daintily; because by all these things I am the more like Jesus Christ, my only Spouse."

"Foolish girl!" interrupted the judge, losing patience a little; "hast thou learnt all these silly delusions already? At least thou canst not thank thy God that he has made thee sightless?"

"For that, more than all the rest, I thank him daily and hourly with all my heart."

"How so? dost thou think it a blessing never to have seen the face of a human being, or the sun, or the earth? What strange fancies are these?"

5. "They are not so, most noble sir. For in the midst of what you call darkness, I see a spot of what I must call light, it contrasts so strongly with all around. It is to me what the sun is to you, which I know to be local from the varying direction of its rays. And this object looks upon me as with a countenance of intensest beauty, and smiles upon me as ever. And I know it to be that of Him whom I love with undivided affection. I would not for the world have its splendor dimmed by a brighter sun, nor its wondrous loveliness confounded with the diversities of other features, nor my gaze on it drawn aside by earthly visions. I love him too much, not to wish to see him always alone."

* Blind.

6. "Come, come ; let me hear no more of this silly prattle. Obey the emperor at once, or I must try what a little pain will do. That will soon tame thee."

"Pain !" she echoed, innocently.

"Yes, pain. Hast thou never felt it ? hast thou never been hurt by any one in thy life ?"

"Oh, no ; Christians never hurt one another."

7. The rack was standing, as usual, before him ; and he made a sign to Catulus to place her upon it. The executioner pushed her back on it by her arms ; and as she made no resistance, she was easily laid extended on its wooden couch. The loops of the ever-ready ropes were in a moment passed round her ancles, and her arms drawn over the head. The poor sightless girl saw not who did all this ; she knew not but it might be the same person who had been conversing with her. If there had been silence hitherto, men now held their very breath, while Cæcelia's lips moved in earnest prayer.

8. "Once more, before proceeding further, I call on thee to sacrifice to the gods, and escape cruel torments," said the judge, with a sterner voice.

"Neither torments nor death," firmly replied the victim, tied to the altar, "shall separate me from the love of Christ. I can offer up no sacrifice but to the one living God, and its ready oblation is myself."

9. The prefect made a signal to the executioner, and he gave one rapid whirl to the two wheels of the rack, round the windlasses of which the ropes were wound ; and the limbs of the maiden were stretched with a sudden jerk, which, though not enough to wrench them from their sockets, as a further turn would have done, sufficed to inflict an excruciating, or more truly, a racking pain, through all her frame. Far more grievous was this from the preparation and the cause of it being unseen, and from that additional suffering which darkness inflicts. A quivering of her features and a sudden paleness alone gave evidence of her suffering.

10. "Ha ! ha !" the judge exclaimed, "thou feelest that ! Come, let it suffice ; obey, and thou shalt be freed."

She seemed to take no heed of his words, but gave vent to her feelings in prayer : "I thank thee, O Lord Jesus Christ, that thou hast made me suffer pain the first time for thy sake. I have loved thee in peace ; I have loved thee in comfort ; I have loved thee in joy ; and now in pain I love thee still more. How much sweeter it is to be like thee, stretched upon thy cross even, than resting upon the hard couch at the poor man's table !"

11. "Thou triflest with me !" exclaimed the judge, thoroughly vexed, "and makest light of my lenity. We will try something stronger. Here, Catulus, apply a lighted torch to her sides."

A thrill of disgust and horror ran through the assembly, which could not help sympathizing with the poor blind creature. A murmur of suppressed indignation broke out from all sides of the hall.

12. Cæcelia, for the first time, learnt that she was in the midst of a crowd. A crimson glow of modesty rushed into her brow, her face, and neck, just before white as marble.

The angry judge checked the rising gush of feeling ; and all listened in silence, as she spoke again, with warmer earnestness than before :

"O my dear Lord and Spouse ! I have been ever true and faithful to thee ! Let me suffer pain and torture for thee ; but spare me confusion from human eyes. Let me come to thee at once ; not covering my face with my hands in shame, when I stand before thee."

13. Another muttering of compassion was heard.

"Catulus !" shouted the baffled judge, in fury, "do your duty, sirrah ! What are you about, fumbling all day with that torch ?"

"It is too late. She is dead."

"Dead !" cried out Tertullus ; "dead, with one turn of the wheel ? Impossible !"

14. Catulus gave the rack a turn backwards, and the body remained motionless. It was true ; she had passed from the rack to the throne, from the scowl of the judge's countenance to her Spouse's welcoming embrace. Had she breathed out her pure soul, as a sweet perfume, in the incense of her prayer ? or had her heart been unable to get back its blood, from the intensity of that first virginal blush ?

15. In the stillness of awe and wonder, a clear, bold voice cried out, from the group near the door, " Impious tyrant, dost thou not see that a poor blind Christian hath more power over life and death than thou or thy cruel masters ? "

" What ! a third time in twenty-four hours wilt thou dare to cross my path ? This time thou shalt not escape. "

16. These were Corvinus' words, garnished with a furious imprecation, as he rushed from his father's side, round the inclosure before the tribunal, towards the group. But as he ran blindly on he struck against an officer of herculean build, who, no doubt quite accidentally, was advancing from it. He reeled, and the soldier caught hold of him, saying :

" You are not hurt, I hope, Corvinus ? "

" No, no ; let me go, Quadratus, let me go. "

17. " Where are you running to in such a hurry ? Can I help you ? " asked his captor, still holding him fast.

" Let me loose, I say, or he will be gone. "

" Who will be gone ? "

" Pancrätius, " answered Corvinus ; " who just now insulted my father. "

" Pancrätius ! " said Quadratus, looking round, and seeing that he had got clear off ; " I do not see him. " And he let him go ; but it was too late. The youth was safe at Diogenes' in Suburra.

18. While this scene was going on, the prefect, mortified, ordered Catulus to see the body thrown into the Tiber.

But another officer, muffled in his cloak, stepped aside and beckoned to Catulus, who understood the sign, and stretched out his hand to receive a proffered purse.

" Out of the Porta Capena, at Lucina's villa, an hour after sunset, " said Sebastian.

19. "It shall be delivered there, safe," said the executioner.

"Of what, do you think, did that poor girl die?" asked a spectator from his companion, as they went out.

"Of fright, I fancy," he replied.

"Of Christian modesty," interposed a stranger, who passed them.

27. PEACE TRIBUNALS.

ARCHBISHOP KENRICK.

FRANCIS PATRICK KENRICK, D. D., archbishop of Baltimore, was born in Dublin, in 1797. In biblical and theological learning, he has no superior among the hierarchy of the Church. His "Dogmatic Theology" and "Primacy of the Apostolic See," and others of his voluminous works, are everywhere received as standard authorities. His greatest work, however, is his Translation of the Holy Bible, with notes and comments. It is worthy of remark that the brother of this eminent prelate is Archbishop of St. Louis, and has also written some works of merit.

1. PHILANTHROPISTS often speculate on the propriety of establishing a peace tribunal, to settle, without the proud control of fierce and bloody war, the various controversies which may arise among nations; yet they seldom reflect that such a tribunal existed in the middle ages, in the person of the sovereign pontiff. The warlike spirit of the northern barbarians, which still survived in their descendants, should be understood in order to fully appreciate the services which the popes in restraining it rendered to society.

2. Their efforts were not always successful, but their merit was not, on that account, the less in endeavoring to stem the torrent of human passion; and their success was sufficient to entitle them to the praise of having effectually labored to substitute moral and religious influence for brute force.

3. As ministers of the Prince of Peace, they often interposed spontaneously, and with arms powerful before God, opposed the marauders who rushed forward to shed human blood. The fathers of the Council of Rheims, in 1119, under the presidency of Calistus II., were engaged in ecclesiastical deliberations, when the pontiff communicated to them overtures of peace which had reached him from Henry V.

4. He informed them that he must repair to the place which the emperor had appointed for an interview, promising to return and close the Council. "Afterwards," said he, "I shall wait on the King of England, my godchild and relative, and exhort him, Count Theobald his nephew, and others who are at variance, to come to a reconciliation, that each, for the love of God, may do justice to the other, and according to the law of God, all of them being pacified, may abandon war, and with their subjects enjoy the security of perfect peace."

5. Leibnitz regarded this mediatorial office of the pope as one among the most beautiful evidences of Christian influence on society, and expressed the desire, which, however, he did not hope to see realized, that a peace tribunal were established anew at Rome, with the Pontiff as its president, that the controversies of princes, and the internal dissension of nations might, by the mild influence of religion, be decided without bloodshed. "Since we are allowed to indulge fancy," said he, "why should we not cherish an idea that would renew among us the golden age?"

28. FIRST BATTLE ON THE PLAINS OF ABRAHAM.

GARNEAU.

1. At daybreak the English army was drawn up in battle array on the plains of Abraham. When, at six in the morning, M. de Montcalm received the unexpected news of this landing, he could not believe it. He thought it was some separate detachment, and, carried away by his usual vivacity, he set forward with only a part of his troops, without making his arrangements known to the governor.

2. At this moment the army of Beau Port found itself reduced to about 6,000 fighting men, because sundry corps had been detached from it. General Montcalm took with him 4,500 men, and left the rest in the camp. These troops defiled by the bridge of boats placed across the River St. Charles, entered the city by Palace Gate, on the north, and marching through, went out by St. John's and St. Louis' Gate, on the west, to the plains of Abraham, where, at eight o'clock, they came in sight of the enemy. Montcalm perceived, not without surprise, the entire English army drawn up in line to receive him. By a fatal precipitation he resolved to make the attack, notwithstanding all advice to the contrary, despite the opinion even of his major-general, the Chevalier de Montreuil—who represented to him that with such a far inferior force they were in no condition to attack—and despite the positive orders of the governor, who wrote him not to open fire till all the forces were brought together, and that he himself would march to his assistance with the troops left to guard the camp. But the general, fearing lest the English should intrench themselves on the plains, and render their position impregnable, gave the order for battle. The English were two to one; they numbered 8,000 men present under arms. But Montcalm was willing to try his fortune, hoping that success might again crown his audacity, as it did before at Carillon.

3. He drew up his men in a single line three men deep, the right on St. Foy's, and the left on St. Louis' road, without any reserved corps. The regulars, whose grenadiers were with M. de Bougainville, formed the centre of this line. The government militia of Quebec and Montreal occupied the right, that of Three Rivers and a portion of that of Montreal formed the left. Platoons of marines and Indians were thrown on the two wings. Then, without giving time for the troops to draw breath, he gave the order to advance on the enemy. They rushed forward so precipitately that the line broke, and the battalions were found one in advance of the other, so that the English thought they were advancing in columns, especially those of the centre.

4. General Wolfe's army was drawn up in a square in front of the heights of Neveu, the right resting on the wood of Samos, and a small eminence on the verge of the precipitous bank of the St. Lawrence; the left on the house of Borgia. One of the sides of the square faced the heights; another looked toward the St. Foy road, along which it was drawn up; and a third was turned towards the wood of Sillery. Wolfe had commenced along the St. Foy road a line of small earthen redoubts, which were carried backward in a semicircle. Six regiments, the Louisburg grenadiers, and two pieces of cannon formed the side facing the city. The two other sides were formed by three full regiments, one of which was the 78th Scotch Highlanders, fifteen or sixteen hundred strong. Another regiment, in eight divisions, was placed in reserve in the centre of the lines.

5. The action commenced with the Canadian skirmishers and some Indians. They kept up a brisk fire on the British line, which bore it bravely, though with considerable loss. General Wolfe, convinced that, if he were beaten, retreat was impossible, passed along the ranks of his army encouraging his men to fight. He caused them to double-load their guns, and ordered them not to fire till the French came within twenty paces. The latter, who had lost all their firmness by the time they came within reach of the English, opened in an irregular manner, and in some battalions, too far off, a platoon fire which took little effect. They, nevertheless, continued to advance ; but, on coming within forty paces of their adversaries, they were assailed by so murderous a fire, that, with the disorder in which they already were, it was impossible to regulate their movements, and in a little time they all fell into the strangest confusion. General Wolfe seized that moment to attack in his turn, and, although already wounded in the wrist, he led his grenadiers to charge the French with the bayonet. He had only taken a few steps in advance, when he was struck by a second ball, which pierced his breast. He was carried to the rear, and his troops continued the charge, most of them being unaware of his death till after the battle ; they set off in pursuit of the French, part of whom, having no bayonets, gave way at the moment, despite the efforts of Montcalm and his principal officers. Some one who was near Wolfe cried out, "They run !" "Who?" demanded the dying general, and his face lit up with sudden animation. "The French!" was the reply. "What, already? Then I die content!" And so saying, the hero expired.

6. Almost at the same moment Colonel Carleton was wounded in the head ; Brigadier-General Monckton having received a shot, left the field, and General Townshend, the third in command, succeeded him in command of the army.

7. The victors then pressed the fugitives on all sides, bayonet or sabre in hand. Little more resistance was offered, except from the skirmishers. The chief of brigade, Senesergnes, and M. de St. Ours, who filled the same grade in that battle, fell, mortally wounded, into the power of the enemy. General Montcalm, who had already received two wounds, did all he could to rally his troops, and regulate the retreat ; he was between St. Louis' Gate and the heights of Neveu, when a shot, penetrating his loins, threw him from his horse, mortally wounded. He was carried by some grenadiers to the city, into which a part of the French threw themselves, while the greater number fled towards the bridge of boats on the River St. Charles. The governor arrived from Beau Port just as the troops were disbanding. He rallied 1,000 Canadians between St. John's and St. Louis' Gates, put himself at their head, and by a furious fire arrested the course of the enemy for some time, which saved the fugitives. The rout was complete only among the regular troops. The Canadians continued to fight as they retreated ; favored by some small woods or thickets by which they were surrounded, they forced several English corps to retire, and only yielded at length to superior numbers. It was from this resistance that the victors sustained the heaviest loss. Three hundred Scotch highlanders, returning from the pursuit, were attacked by the Canadians on the coteau St. Genevieve, and beaten back, till they were rescued by two regiments sent to their assistance.

8. It was only at eight o'clock that Colonel Bougainville, who was at Cap Rouge, received orders to march to the plains of Abraham ; he immediately set out with nearly half his troops, who were dispersed almost as far as Pointe-aux-Trembles, but being unable to arrive in time to take part in the battle, and seeing that all was lost, he retired. The English did not deem it expedient to profit by the confusion of their adversaries to penetrate into Quebec, or take possession of the camp at Beau Port, which might afterwards be retaken by the troops who had retired into the city. Such was the issue of the first battle of Abraham, which decided the possession of a country almost as large as the half of Europe.

281 $\frac{1}{2}$. SECOND BATTLE ON THE PLAINS OF ABRAHAM.

GARNEAU.

1. LEVIS, who had gone forward with his staff to reconnoiter in person the English position on the heights of Neveu, had no sooner perceived this movement than he sent orders to his troops to hasten their march to the plains of Abraham. The English general, seeing as yet but the van of the French army, resolved to attack it without delay, before it could recover from the disorder of the march; but he had to deal with a man of rare intelligence and of almost imperturbable coolness. He drew up his troops in front of the heights of Neveu; his right rested on the coteau St. Genevieve, and his left on the steep which there bounds the River St. Lawrence; his entire line was about a quarter of a league in length. Four regiments, under the orders of Colonel Burton, formed the right, placed on the St. Foy Road; four other regiments, with the Scotch highlanders, under Colonel Fraser, formed the left, on the St. Louis road. Two battalions were held in reserve. Besides these two battalions, the right flank of the army was covered by a body of light infantry under Major Dalling, and the left flank by Captain Huzzen's company of rangers, with a hundred volunteers under Captain McDonald. General Murray gave the order to march forward.

2. The French vanguard, composed of ten companies of grenadiers, was put in order of battle, part on the right, in a bastion raised by the English the year before, part on the left, in Dumont's Mill, with the houses, tannery, and other buildings which surround it, on the St. Foy road. The rest of the army, having learned what was going on, had quickened its paces more and more as it advanced; the three brigades of the right were scarcely formed when the English commenced the attack with vigor.

3. General Murray felt the importance of seizing Dumont's Mill, covering as it did the pass by which the French gained the field of battle, and he caused an attack to be made on it with superior forces. He hoped that by crushing the five companies of grenadiers by whom it was defended, he might then fall on the soldiers marching past, separate them from the battlefield and cut off the right wing engaged on the St. Louis road.

4. Levis, in order to counteract his design, removed his right to the entrance of the wood on its rear, withdrew the grenadiers from Dumont's Mill, and caused them to fall back, so as to lessen the distance between them and the advancing brigades. It was at this moment that Bourlamarque was grievously wounded by a cannon-ball, which killed his horse under him. His soldiers, left without orders, and seeing the grenadiers engaged in a furious and unequal contest, took it on themselves to go and sustain them, and fell into line at the very moment when the enemy was directing great part of his strength, and nearly all his artillery, on that very point; the cannons and howitzers, charged with ball and case-shot, plowed the space occupied by that wing, which reeled under the most murderous fire. The grenadiers rushed forward at full charge, retook the mill after an obstinate struggle, and maintained themselves in it. These brave soldiers, commanded by Captain d'Aiguebelles, nearly all perished that day.

5. While these events were passing on the left, General Levis caused the soldiers of the right to retake the bastion which they had abandoned in falling back. The Canadians of the Queen's Brigade, who occupied this small redoubt and the pine-wood on the edge of the cape, recovered their ground, and soon charged in their turn, supported by M. de Saint Luc and some Indians. The contest became then no less violent on that part of the line than on the left. All the troops had arrived on the field of battle, and the fire was quicker on both sides. The militiamen were seen lying down to load their arms, rise after the discharge of the artillery, and rush forward to shoot the artillerymen at their guns. Those of Montreal fought with admirable courage, especially the battalion commanded by the brave Colonel Rhéaume, who was killed. This brigade, placed in the centre of the French line, was commanded by M. de Repentigny. It alone arrested in open field the centre of the English army, advancing at full speed, having the advantage of height. It repulsed several charges, and slackened by its firmness and the briskness of its fire the pursuit of the enemy, who was pressing the grenadiers of the left, and subsequently facilitated for the latter, by covering them, the means of marching forward anew ; in short, this brigade was the only one that kept its ground throughout the whole of that desperate struggle.

6. Meanwhile the attack which had made the English masters for a moment of the positions held by the French vanguard at the beginning of the battle, had been repulsed, and the latter had everywhere regained their ground. Thus the aggressive movement of Gen. Murray by the St. Foy road had failed, and that check permitted the French to attack him in their turn.

7. Levis, having observed that the English had weakened their left in order to give greater strength to their right, resolved to profit by it. He gave orders to his troops to make a bayonet-charge on the left wing of the enemy, and to drive it from the St. Louis road to that of St. Foy ; by this maneuver they outflanked the whole English army, hurled it from the height of the coteau St. Genevieve, and cut off its retreat to the city. Colonel Poularier darted forward at the head of the Royal Roussillon brigade, attacked the English with impetuosity, pierced their ranks through and through, and put them to flight. At the same time their light troops gave way, and the fugitives cast themselves backward and forward from the centre of their army, which interrupted its fire. Levis availed himself of this disorder to charge with his left, which, in its turn, pierced the enemy's right, drove it on before it, and threw it into complete disorder.

8. They then threw themselves everywhere in pursuit of the English ; but their rapid flight, and the short distance to the city, did not permit them to drive them into the River St. Charles. Yet General Levis might still have carried out his plan, were it not for the blunder of an officer whom he sent to tell the Queen's Brigade to support the charge of the Royal Roussillon on the right, and who, instead of having that movement executed, had it placed behind the left wing.

9. The English left in the hands of the victors all their artillery, their ammunition, the tools they had brought to make intrenchments, and a part of their wounded. Their losses were considerable ; nearly a fourth of their soldiers had been killed or disabled. " Had the French, less fatigued, been able to attack the city before it had time to recover from the confusion, it would probably have fallen into the hands of its former masters," says Knox, " for such was the confusion that the English forgot to man the ramparts, sentinels deserted their posts, the fugitives ran for safety to the Lower Town, and the gates were even left open for some time." But more could not be expected from the conquerors. To oppose the twenty-two cannons of the enemy they had had only three small field-pieces, drawn with great difficulty through the marshes. They, too, had sustained great losses, having been obliged to form and remain long stationary under the enemy's fire. They counted four hundred officers killed or wounded, among whom was a brigadier-general, six other officers of rank, and the commander of the Indians.

10. The two opposing armies were nearly equal in strength, because Levis had left several detachments in charge of the artillery, the boats, and the bridge over the River Jacques Cartier, so as to secure his retreat in case of a failure. The cavalry had taken no part in the action.

29. THE SPIRIT OF THE AGE.

CUMMINGS.

REVEREND DR. CUMMINGS, the learned and accomplished pastor of St. Stephen's Church, New York, has, in his leisure moments, contributed to the polite literature of the day, both in prose and poetry. Many of his poems are real gems ; such as prove the author, had he devoted himself to poetry, might have taken the first rank among the poets of his country.—Dr. Brownson.

1. A WONDERFUL genius is the Spirit of the Age ! No matter how true or how much needed a maxim may be, one is reminded of the danger he incurs in uttering it, by the awful warning that it is not in accordance with the Spirit of the Age. The Spirit of the Age knows all things, and has an opinion to express on all subjects—past, present, or future. It is a thousand pities that so learned a spirit can never be tangibly taken hold of and made to speak for himself. But, like certain other spirits, though always busy at work, he is never seen, and though quoted by everybody, never speaks himself. Still, as we do not bear him unlimited veneration, we take the liberty sometimes to bring him fairly before us, in the form we imagine his vague and unsettled nature would choose, were he to become visible.

2. In these instances the great Genius presents himself adorned with a face very much like that of an ape, for his speech imitates wisdom and truth precisely as a monkey imitates a man. The body, half human and half Satanic, winds off in a serpentine manner, emblematic of the crookedness of his philosophy. On his head, in lieu of the Socratic bays, we discern a little Red Republican cap dashed slightly on one side, to make him look interesting ; under his arm he carries a wonderful dictionary, compiled from the leading socialist, progressive, ultra-democratic periodicals of the day.

3. From this book of wisdom, the obliging Genius answers, without stopping to take breath, all the possible difficulties of every art, science, and creed, in a manner which would put all the gray-beard philosophy of olden times to the blush. Nothing is too high or too profound for him. Yet, to tell the truth, whenever he affirms a thing, we have a shrewd suspicion that he knows he ought to deny it ; and whenever we hear him cry loudly for a measure as good, we feel pretty sure that secretly he understands it to be an evil.

4. What he says may often seem plausible enough, but we prefer to look at his professions more searchingly, and discover what he means. Thus, for example, when he opens his dictionary at the word Liberty, and reads a brilliant passage descriptive of its greatness and glory, we marvel at his keeping a serious face, and suspect that, were he to state honestly what he means, it would sound very much in this fashion : "Gentlemen, Liberty means leave for me to pick your pocket, and for you—not to complain."

5. He turns over a leaf of his book, and tells us of the philosophy of his enlightened school. We translate his definition of philosophy, and it avers that philosophy is the art of proving that two and two, not unfrequently, make five ; that black in many cases looks exceedingly like white, and that persons who wish to preserve their countenances from being burnt by the sun ought to wear a thick veil, especially at twelve o'clock at night. Does the Genius speak of the upwardness of modern progress ? Then, to our understanding, he means that progress is a faithful imitation of the motion of a crab going down hill. He descants upon the comforts of equality.

6. Understood as he means it, no matter what he may say, equality consists in the very pleasant process of cutting off the heads of the tall men, and in pulling out the small men, as one might do a spy-glass, so that both become of a size. And when he searches his dictionary to give us the true meaning of his favorite word, Fraternity, his warm description of the peace which it produces puts us in mind of the famous Kilkenney cats, who fought until they had eaten each other up, all except the tips of their respective tails, which they still wagged in token of defiance.

7. Guided by this key to the true meaning of the learned Genius of the Age, we look to him for an answer to the questions proposed higher up, and we have no doubt that his true view of the case would embody itself in solutions equivalent to the following : "Religion and society," he would say, "are two orders, one opposed to the other. Religion was made, of course, by the Almighty ; it begins at the altar, ends at the holy-water font at the door, and is bounded by the four walls of the church. The period of its duration is from Sunday morning until Sunday evening. Society was invented by the Devil, and it rules the week from Monday morning until Saturday night. Business, politics, and amusements, are things that lie beyond the verge of morality, and the control of religion. He who pretends to be religious anywhere but inside of the church is a bigot, a hypocrite, a man of the Dark Ages ; and he who outside of the church suits his convenience by cunningly cheating, smoothly lying—playing, in short, the confidence man—is a smart man ; in fact, something of an honorable man ; and, in fact—if he take care not to be found out—he may be one of the most remarkable men of his age and country.”

30. DEATH OF ALONZO DE AGUILAR.

PRESCOTT.

WM. H. PRESCOTT—a distinguished American historian, born in 1796. While all due praise is given him for the merits of his two great works, “Ferdinand and Isabella,” and the “Conquest of Mexico,” it is much to be regretted that religious prejudices have in many instances betrayed him into grievous error, as well as into gross injustice. “We say it the more freely, as it is almost the only stain on an otherwise faultless book—a dark spot, or rather a collection of spots, on the sun. We regret this fault the more, as such prejudice is wholly unworthy the enlightened and moderate mind of Mr. Prescott.”—Rt. Rev. Dr. Spalding.

1. For a long period, the south of Spain was occupied by the Moors, the city of Granada being their capital. They were finally conquered by Ferdinand the Catholic, to whom Granada was surrendered on the twenty-fifth day of November, 1491 ; but many of the inhabitants of the mountain regions received with great reluctance the Christian yoke, and in December, 1500, an insurrection broke out among them.

2. Orders were issued to the principal chiefs and cities of Andalusia to concentrate their forces at the city of Ronda, in the south of Spain, and thence to march against the insurgent Moors. Several distinguished noblemen and officers of Spain accordingly assembled with their troops at the city. Among them were Alonzo de Aguilar, the Conde de Ureña, and the Conde de Cifuentes. The historian’s narrative then proceeds as follows :

3. It was determined by the chiefs to strike into the heart of the Red Sierra, as it was called, from the color of its rocks rising to the east of Ronda, and the principal theatre of insurrection. On 18th March, 1501, the little army encamped before Monarda, on the skirts of a mountain, where the Moors were understood to have assembled in considerable force. They had not been long in these quarters before the enemy were seen hovering along the slopes of the mountain, from which the Christian camp was divided by a narrow river—the Rio Verde, probably, which has gained so much celebrity in the Spanish song.

4. Aguilar's¹ troops, who occupied the van, were so much roused at the sight of the enemy, that a small party, seizing a banner, rushed across the stream, without orders, in pursuit of them. The odds, however, were so great, that they would have been severely handled, had not Aguilar, while he bitterly condemned their temerity, advanced promptly to their support with the remainder of his corps. The Count of Ureña² followed with the central division, leaving the Count of Cifuentes,³ with the troops of Seville, to protect the camp.

5. The Moors fell back as the Christians advanced, and retiring nimbly from point to point, led them up the rugged steep far into the recesses of the mountains. At length they reached an open level, encompassed on all sides by a natural rampart of rocks, where they had deposited their valuable effects, together with their wives and children. The latter, at sight of the invaders, uttered dismal cries, and fled into the remoter depths of the sierra.

6. The Christians were too much attracted by the rich spoils before them to think of following, and dispersed in every quarter in quest of plunder, with all the heedlessness and insubordination of raw, inexperienced levies. It was in vain that Alonzo de Aguilar reminded them that their wily enemy was still unconquered, or that he endeavored to force them into the ranks again and restore order. No one heeded his call, or thought of any thing beyond the present moment, and of securing as much booty to himself as he could carry.

7. The Moors, in the mean while, finding themselves no longer pursued, were aware of the occupations of the Christians, whom they, not improbably, had purposely decoyed into the snare. They resolved to return to the scene of action and surprise their incautious enemy. Stealthily advancing, therefore, under the shadows of night now falling thick around they poured through the rocky defiles of the inclosure on the astonished Spaniards.

¹ Pronounced A-ghe-lar.

² U-rane'-ya.

³ Thee-fuen'-tes.

8. An unlucky explosion, at this crisis, of a cask of powder into which a spark had accidentally fallen, threw a broad glare over the scene, and revealed for a moment the situation of the hostile parties—the Spaniards in the utmost disorder, many of them without arms, and staggering under the weight of their fatal booty; while their enemy were seen gliding, like so many demons of darkness, through every crevice and avenue of their inclosures, in the act of springing on their devoted victims.

9. This appalling spectacle, vanishing almost as soon as seen, and followed by the hideous yells and war-cries of the assailants, struck a panic into the hearts of the soldiers, who fled, scarcely offering any resistance.

10. The darkness of the night was as favorable to the Moors, familiar with all the intricacies of the ground, as it was fatal to the Christians, who, bewildered in the mazes of the sierra, and losing their footing at every step, fell under the swords of their pursuers, or went down the dark gulfs and precipices which yawned all around.

31. DEATH OF ALONZO DE AGUILAR—continued.

1. AMIDST this dreadful confusion, the Count of Ureña succeeded in gaining a lower level of the sierra, where he halted, and endeavored to rally his panic-struck followers. His noble comrade, Alonzo de Aguilar, still maintained his position on the heights above, refusing all entreaties of his followers to attempt a retreat. "When," said he, proudly, "was an Aguilar ever known to fly from the field?" His eldest son, the heir of his house and honors, Don Pedro de Cordova, a youth of great promise, fought at his side. He had received a severe wound on the head from a stone, and a iavelin had pierced quite through his leg. With one knee resting on the ground, however, he made a brave defence with his sword.

2. The sight was too much for his father, and he implored him to suffer himself to be removed from the field. "Let not the hopes of our house be crushed at a single blow," said he. "Go, my son; live as becomes a Christian knight: live, and cherish your desolate mother!" All his endeavors were fruitless, however; and the gallant boy refused to leave his father's side till he was forcibly borne away by the attendants, who fortunately succeeded in bringing him in safety to the station occupied by the Count Ureña.

3. Meantime, the brave little band of cavaliers who remained true to Aguilar had fallen one after another; and the chief, left almost alone, retreated to a huge rock in the middle of the plain, and, placing his back against it, still made fight, though weakened by a loss of blood, like a lion at bay, against his enemies. In this situation, he was pressed so hard by a Moor of uncommon size and strength, that he was compelled to turn and close with him in a single combat.

4. The strife was long and desperate; till Don Alonzo, whose corselet had become unlaced in the previous struggle, having received a severe wound in the breast, followed by another on the head, grappled closely with his adversary, and they came rolling on the ground together. The Moor remained uppermost; but the spirit of the Spanish cavalier had not sunk with his strength, and he proudly exclaimed, as if to intimidate his enemy, "I am Don Alonzo de Aguilar!" to which the other rejoined, "And I am the Feri de Ben Estepar!"—a well-known name of terror to the Christians.

5. The sound of his detested name roused all the vengeance of the dying hero; and, grasping his foe in mortal agony, he rallied his strength for a final blow. But it was too late; his hand failed, and he was soon dispatched by the dagger of his more vigorous rival. Thus fell Alonzo Hernandez de Cordova, or Alonzo de Aguilar, as he is commonly called, from the land where his family estates lay.

6. "He was of the greatest authority among the grandees of his time," says Father Abarea, "for his lineage, personal character, large domains, and the high posts which he filled both in peace and war. More than forty years of his life he served against the infidel; under the banner of his house in boyhood, and as leader of that same banner in later life, as viceroy of Andalusia and commander of the royal armies.

7. "He was the fifth lord of his warlike and pious house who had fallen fighting for their country and religion against the accursed sect of Mahomet. And there is good reason to believe," continues the same orthodox authority, "that his soul has received the reward of a Christian soldier, since he was armed on that very morning with the blessed sacraments of confession and communion."

32. GENTLE RIVER.

The sad death of Alonzo de Aguilar and his brave companions, as related in the foregoing lesson, fell mournfully upon the national heart of Spain, and was kept in fresh remembrance by the many expressions of sympathy and admiration which it called forth from the popular literature of the country. The following poem is a translation by the Rev. Thomas Percy, Protestant Bishop of Dromore, in Ireland (born 1728, died 1811), of one of the ballads in which the fate of the hero is commemorated. The translation is found in the "Reliques of Ancient English Poetry," a work edited by Bishop Percy with great taste and judgment, and originally published in 1765. It has since been frequently reprinted, and has exerted a most favorable influence upon English poetical literature of a date subsequent to its publication.

1. GENTLE river,* gentle river,
 Lo, thy streams are stain'd with gore;
 Many a brave and noble captain
 Floats along thy willow'd shore.
2. All beside thy limpid waters,
 All beside thy sands so bright,
 Moorish chiefs and Christian warriors
 Join'd in fierce and mortal fight.
3. Lords, and dukes, and noble princes
 On thy fatal banks were slain;

* The original is Rio Verde, that is, River Verde. But verde in Spanish also means green; and the translator, not being aware that it was a proper name, substituted gentle;—an epithet not well suited to a mountain stream.

Fatal banks, that gave to slaughter
All the pride and flower of Spain.

4. There the hero, brave Alonzo,
Full of wounds and glory, died ;
There the fearless Urdiales
Fell a victim by his side.
5. Lo, where yonder Don Saavedra*
Through their squadrons slow retires;
Proud Seville, his native city,
Proud Seville his worth admires.
6. Close behind, a renegado
Loudly shouts, with taunting cry,
"Yield thee, yield thee, Don Saavedra!
Dost thou from the battle fly?
7. "Well I know thee, haughty Christian;
Long I lived beneath thy roof ;
Oft I've in the lists of glory
Seen thee win the prize of proof.
8. "Well I know thy aged parents,
Well thy blooming bride I know;
Seven years I was thy captive,
Seven years of pain and woe.
9. "May our prophet grant my wishes,
Haughty chief, thou shalt be mine;
Thou shalt drink that cup of sorrow.
Which I drank when I was thine."
10. Like a lion turns the warrior,
Back he sends an angry glare;
Whizzing came the Moorish javelin,
Vainly whizzing, through the air.

* Don Saavedra is an imaginary personage, no nobleman of that name having really been engaged in the battle.

11. Back the hero, full of fury,
Sent a deep and mortal wound ;
Instant sank the renegado,
Mute and lifeless, on the ground.
 12. With a thousand Moors surrounded,
Brave Saavedra stands at bay;
Wearied out, but never daunted,
Cold at length the warrior lay.
 13. Near him fighting, great Alonzo
Stout resists the paynim bands,
From his slaughter'd steed dismounted,
Firm intrench'd behind him stands.
 14. Furious press the hostile squadron,
Furious he repels their rage;
Loss of blood at length enfeebles;
Who can war with thousands wage ?
 15. Where yon rock the plain o'er shadows,
Close beneath its foot retired,
Fainting sank the bleeding hero,
And without a groan expired.
-

33. ST. PETER'S ENTRY INTO ROME.

ARCHBISHOP HUGHES.

Most Reverend JOHN HUGHES, D. D., first Archbishop of New York, born in Tyrone, Ireland, in 1798. A few years after his ordination he was brought before the American public by a controversy and oral discussion with Rev. Mr. Breckinridge, a Presbyterian minister, which established his reputation as one of the ablest controversialists of the day. Indeed, his life since then has been almost a continual controversy, owing to the perpetual attacks made upon the Church through him. Soon after he became Bishop of New York, he was called on to maintain, in a long-protracted struggle, the freedom of education. His "Debates on the School Question," his "Letters to Kirwan," and his "Letters to Brooks," on the management of church property, are excellent specimens of close reasoning, keen wit, and polished sarcasm. Innumerable lectures and letters on various subjects connected with Catholic interests have kept the Archbishop in the front rank of the champions of the Church.

1. It must have been during the latter portion of the reign of Tiberius Nero Drusus, or in the beginning of the reign of Nero, that a traveller, dressed in Eastern costume, was seen approaching one of the entrances of the imperial city of Rome. He was weary and wayworn. The dust of travel had incrustated itself on the perspiration of his brow. He bore in his hand a staff, but not a crosier. His countenance was pale, but striking and energetic in its expression. Partially bald, what remained of his hair was gray, crisp, and curly.

2. Who was he? No one cared to inquire, for he was only one of those approaching the gates of Rome, within the walls of which, we are told, the population numbered from three to four millions of souls. But who was this pilgrim? He was a man who carried a message from God and his Christ, and who had been impelled to deliver that message in the very heart and centre of Roman corruption and of Roman civilization, such as it was.

3. His name at that time was Peter. His original name had been Simon, but the Son of God having called him and his elder brother, Andrew, from the fisherman's bank on the Sea of Galilee, to be His apostles, changed the name of Simon and called him in the Syriac language, Cephas, which in Latin and English is translated Peter. In Syriac the word signifies a rock, and our Saviour, by changing his name, declared the mission for which he was especially selected.

4. He said to him: "Thou art Cephas, and upon this rock I will build my church, and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it." He was an Apostle, like his brother and the other ten. But he was more—he was the Rock on which the Church was to be built—he was the prince of the Apostolic College. And this was the man who was approaching the gates of the city of Rome. Where he slept that night, whether on or under the porch of some princely palace, history has not informed us. But he soon began to proclaim the message which he had from God. To human view the attempt would appear to be desperate. Rome, at that period, was divided into two principal classes—masters and slaves—both of the same color, and, in many instances, both of the same country.

5. The higher class of those who were not slaves were, at that time, gorged to repletion with the wealth and the plunder which the triumphant armies of Rome had brought to the Imperial capital from the conquered tribes and nations of the then known world. These conquered nations, after having been plundered, as we might say, once for all, were still retained as perpetual tributaries to the exchequer of the Cæsars and of their satellites. The superstitions and idolatries of those nations were all inaugurated in the pagan temples of the Imperial city. Their corruption of morals was also introduced, spreading from freemen to slaves, although such was the state of local morals that no imported corruption could add much to the universal depravity.

6. Such was Rome when this eastern stranger entered its enclosures. He preached the Word of Christ, and his preaching, even in that polluted atmosphere, brought forth many souls to acknowledge and adore the Crucified. He was subsequently joined by St. Paul, and both labored with a common zeal to propagate the doctrine of salvation. They had already made such an impression that the tyrant Nero had them arrested and condemned to death.

7. Peter was crucified, it is generally supposed, on the very spot on which St. Peter's church now stands. The cross was the instrument of punishment for the man of Hebrew origin. But Paul of Tarsus, having been born a Roman citizen, was entitled to a less ignominious death; and accordingly he was beheaded at a place called the Three Fountains, some distance from Rome. Nero made the distinction, which is now so popular, between what is called temporal and spiritual. The body was temporal; and Nero did not pretend to go farther than its destruction.

34. IF THOU COULDEST BE A BIRD.

FABER.

1. IF thou couldst be a bird, what bird wouldst thou be?
A frolicsome gull on the billowy sea,

Screaming and wailing when stormy winds rave,
Or anchor'd, white thing! on the merry green wave?

2. Or an eagle aloft in the blue ether dwelling,
Free of the caves of the hoary Helvellyn,
Who is up in the sunshine when we are in shower,
And could reach our loved ocean in less than an hour?
3. Or a heron that haunts the Wallachian edge
Of the barbarous Danube, 'mid forests of sedge,
And hears the rude waters through dreary swamps flowing,
And the cry of the wild swans and buffaloes lowing?
4. Or a stork on a mosque's broken pillar in peace,
By some famous old stream in the bright land of Greece.
A sweet-manner'd householder! waiving his state,
Now and then, in some kind little toil for his mate?
5. Or a murmuring dove at Stamboul, buried deep
In the long cypress woods where the infidels sleep.
Whose leaf-muffled voice is the soul of the seas,
That hath pass'd from the Bosphorus into the trees!
6. Or a heath-bird, that lies on the Cheviot moor,
Where the wet, shining earth is as bare as the floor;
Who mutters glad sounds, though his joys are but few—
Yellow moon, windy sunshine, and skies cold and blue?
7. Or if thy man's heart worketh in thee at all,
Perchance thou wouldst dwell by some bold baron's hall,
A black, glossy rook, working early and late,
Like a laboring man on the baron's estate?
8. Or a linnet who builds in the close hawthorn bough,
Where her small, frighten'd eyes may be seen looking through;
Who heeds not, fond mother! the ox-lips that shine
On the hedge-banks beneath, or the glazed celandine?

9. Or a swallow that fieth the sunny world over,
The true home of spring and spring-flowers to discover ;
Who, go where he will, takes away on his wings
Good words from mankind for the bright thoughts he brings ?
10. But what ! can these pictures of strange winged mirth
Make the child to forget that she walks on the earth ?
Dost thou feel at thy sides as though wings were to start
From some place where they lie folded up in thy heart ?
11. Then love the green things in thy first simple youth,
The beasts, birds, and fishes, with heart and in truth
And fancy shall pay thee thy love back in skill ;
Thou shalt be all the birds of the air at thy will !

35. NOVEL READING.

A NON.

1. It is argued in favor of novel reading, that works of fiction of the present day are, in their general character, so correct in principle, so unexceptionable in narrative, sometimes even so high-toned in morality, and, in the case of some particular authors, so finished in style, and rich in the varied beauties of good compositions, that they may be perused not only without injury, but actually, under some aspects, with positive advantage. As clever delineations of character, too, they are said to afford so deep an insight into human nature, and so profitable a knowledge of the world and its ways, as to be in those respects a useful study for the inexperienced.

2. There can be no doubt of the vast improvement of the present period in that description of literary production emphatically called light. We know by hearsay that the romances of former days were not calculated to promote the health either of mind or heart ; and that they should have been superseded by fictitious works of a more refining tendency, and a more enlightened character, cannot but be deemed an advantage. Yet, according to all the merit they can possibly claim, and viewing them under their very best and most favorable aspect, they are in many ways, to say the least, extremely dangerous.

3. Novels are in general pictures, and usually very highly wrought pictures, of human passions; and it has been remarked, that although the conclusion of the tale frequently awards signal punishment and degradation to some very gross offender, yet that in a far greater number of instances passion is represented as working out its ends successfully, and attaining its object even by the sacrifice of duty—an evil lesson for the heart yet unacquainted with vice, and uncontaminated by the world. It may indeed be safely questioned whether the knowledge of human nature thus acquired is of a profitable kind, and whether experience of life might not, for all practical purposes, be derived from other and purer sources than the teachings of romances.

4. Again, novels, as a class, present false views of life; and as it is the error of the young to mistake those for realities, they become the dupes of their own ardent and enthusiastic imaginations, which, instead of trying to control and regulate, they actually strengthen and nourish with the poisonous food of phantoms and chimeras. When the thirst for novel reading has become insatiable, as with indulgence it is sure to do, they come at last to live in an unreal fairy-land, amid heroes and heroines of their own creation. The taste for serious reading and profitable occupation is destroyed—all relish for prayer is lost. In addition to their other disadvantages, many of these books unfortunately teem with maxims subversive of simple faith, and in cordial irreverence for the truths of religion; and so it but frequently happens, as the climax of evil, that faith suffers to a greater or lesser extent from their habitual, indiscriminate perusal.

5. As a recreation, light works may, of course, be occasionally resorted to; but so many and so great are their attendant dangers, that extreme care should be taken to neutralize their poison by infallible antidotes. The selection of such works should always be left to a religious parent, or a pious and intelligent friend. They should never be made an occupation, but merely serve as a pastime, and that occasionally. They should never be perused in the early part of the day, but only in the evening hour, specially laid aside for relaxation. They should never be continued beyond the moderate length of time to which, under prudent and pious direction, you have limited yourself—never resumed after night prayers, and never read on Sundays.

6. They should not be allowed to engross the mind to the exclusion of all other thoughts ; but more especially during their perusal should the sweet, refreshing, invigorating thought of God's presence be often recalled, and our aspirations ascend to His Throne, that He who is the Author of all the happiness we enjoy may bless and sanctify even our amusements.

7. The observance of these conditions no doubt requires some self-control ; but if you cannot exercise that control, neither can you expect to peruse works of fiction without material, perhaps fatal, injury to your precious soul. If you cannot exercise that control, you should never read novels. If there be one more than another of these conditions to which you are recommended strict fidelity, it is to the first. By referring, for directions in your reading, to a pious, experienced guide, you will be secured against making selections among that class of fictitious works impregnated with the venom of anti-catholic maxims.

8. And, as the spirit of impiety and infidelity so prevalent in the literary world, seeks a medium for its venom no less in works of science than in works of fiction, you will find the advantage of applying the foregoing rule in the one case as in the other, never reading a suspected author without having ascertained how far your doubts are well founded.

36. DEATH OF FATHER MARQUETTE.

J. G. SHEA.

JOHN GILMARY SHEA is a native of New York. He has made many valuable contributions to American Catholic literature. His writings are chiefly on historical and archæological subjects. His original "History of the Catholic Missions in America," and his translation (with additions) of De Courcy's "History of the Church in the United States," are works of great value to the student of ecclesiastical history. Mr. Shea has also written "The First Book of History," and a short "History of the United States," for the use of schools.

1. CALMLY and cheerfully he saw the approach of death, for which he prepared by assiduous prayer; his office he regularly recited to the last day of his life; a meditation on death, which he had long since prepared for this hour, he now made the subject of his thoughts; and as his kind but simple companions seemed overwhelmed at the prospect of their approaching loss, he blessed some water with the usual ceremonies, gave his companions directions how to act in his last moments, how to arrange his body when dead, and to commit it to the earth with the ceremonies he prescribed.

2. He now seemed but to seek a grave;—at last perceiving the mouth of a river which still bears his name, he pointed to an eminence as the place of his burial. . . . His companions then erected a little bark cabin, and stretched the dying missionary beneath it as comfortably as their wants permitted them. Still a priest, rather than a man, he thought of his ministry, and, for the last time, heard the confessions of his companions and encouraged them to rely with confidence on the protection of God—then sent them to take the repose they so much needed.

3. When he felt his agony approaching, he called them, and taking his crucifix from around his neck he placed it in their hands, thanking the Almighty for the favor of permitting him to die a Jesuit, a missionary, and alone. Then he relapsed into silence, interrupted only by his pious aspirations, till at last, with the names of Jesus and Mary on his lips, with his eyes raised as if in an ecstasy above his crucifix, with his face radiant with joy, he passed from the scene of his labor to God who was to be his reward.

4. Obedient to his directions, his companions, when the first outbursts of grief were over, laid out the body for burial, and to the sound of his little chapel bell, bore it slowly to the spot which he had pointed out. Here they committed his body to the earth, and, raising a cross above it, returned to their now desolate cabin. Such was the edifying and holy death of the illustrious explorer of the Mississippi, on Saturday, 18th of May, 1675.

37. THE CROSS IN THE WILDERNESS.

MRS. HEMANS.

FELICIA D. HEMANS was born in England in 1794; died in 1835. Her poetry has an elevated tone, with a fine appreciation of the beauty of nature, and expresses the domestic affections with tenderness and truth.

1. SILENT and mournful sat an Indian chief,
In the red sunset, by a grassy tomb;
His eyes, that might not weep, were dark with grief,
And his arms folded in majestic gloom,
And his bow lay unstrung beneath the mound,
Which sanctified the gorgeous waste around.
2. For a pale cross above its greensward rose,
Telling the cedars and the pines, that there
Man's heart and hope had struggled with his woes,
And lifted from the dust a voice of prayer,—
Now all was hush'd; and eve's last splendor shone,
With a rich sadness, on the attesting stone.
3. There came a lonely traveller o'er the wild,
And he, too, paused in reverence by that grave,
Asking the tale of its memorial, piled
Between the forest and the lake's bright wave;
Till, as a wind might stir a wither'd oak,
On the deep dream of age his accents broke.
4. And the gray chieftain, slowly rising, said—
“I listen'd for the words which, years ago,

Pass'd o'er these waters ; though the voice is fled,
Which made them as a singing fountain's flow,
Yet, when I sit in their long-faded track,
Sometimes the forest's murmur gives them back.

5. "Ask'st thou of him whose house is lone beneath?
I was an eagle in my youthful pride,
When o'er the seas he came with summer's breath,
To dwell amidst us on the lake's green side.
Many the times of flowers have been since then;
Many, but bringing naught like him again.
6. "Not with hunter's bow and spear he came,
O'er the blue hills to chase the flying roe;
Not the dark glory of the woods to tame,
Laying their cedars, like the corn stacks, low;
But to spread tidings of all holy things,
Gladdening our souls as with the morning's wings.
7. "Doth not yon cypress whisper how we met,
I and my brethren that from earth are gone,
Under its boughs to hear his voice, which yet
Seems through their gloom to send a silvery tone?
He told of one the grave's dark lands who broke,
And our hearts burn'd within us as he spoke!
8. "He told of far and sunny lands, which lie
Beyond the dust wherein our fathers dwell:
Bright must they be! for there are none that die,
And none that weep, and none that say 'Farewell!'
He came to guide us thither;—but away
The happy call'd him, and he might not stay.
9. "We saw him slowly fade—athirst, perchance,
For the fresh waters of that lovely clime;
Yet was there still a sunbeam in his glance,
And on his gleaming hair no touch of time;
Therefore we hoped—but now the lake looks dim,
For the green summer comes and finds not him.

10. "We gather'd round him in the dewy hour
Of one still morn, beneath his chosen tree:
From his clear voice at first the words of power
Came low, like moanings of a distant sea;
But swell'd, and shook the wilderness ere long,
As if the spirit of the breeze grew strong.
11. "And then once more they trembled on his tongue,
And his white eyelids flutter'd, and his head
Fell back, and mists upon his forehead hung—
Know'st thou not how we pass to join the dead?
It is enough! he sank upon my breast,—
Our friend that loved us, he was gone to rest!
12. "We buried him where he was wont to pray,
By the calm lake, e'en here, at eventide;
We rear'd this cross in token where he lay,
For on the cross, he said, his Lord had died!
Now hath he surely reach'd, o'er mount and wave,
That flowery land whose green turf hides no grave!
13. "But I am sad—I mourn the clear light taken Back from my people, o'er whose place it shone,
The pathway to the better shore forsaken,
And the true words forgotten, save by one,
Who hears them faintly sounding from the past,
Mingled with death-songs, in each fitful blast."
14. Then spoke the wanderer forth, with kindling eye:
"Son of the wilderness, despair thou not,
Though the bright hour may seem to thee gone by,
And the cloud settled o'er thy nation's lot;
Heaven darkly works,—yet where the seed hath been,
There shall the fruitage, glowing, yet be seen."

38. EARLY DAYS AT EMMETTSBURG.

MRS. SETON.

MRS. E. A. SETON, foundress of the Sisters of Charity in the United States, was a convert to the Catholic faith. The following letters were written to two of her friends, shortly after she had commenced the establishment of St. Joseph's, Emmettsburg—the Mother House of the Sisters of Charity. Her life has been beautifully written by Rev. Dr. White.

1. "If you have received no other letters than those you mention, you do not perhaps know of the happy conversion and subsequent death of our Harriet Seton. Cecilia's death Mr. Zocchi must have mentioned particularly. Harriet's was also every way consoling. I have them both lying close by our dwelling, and there say my Te Deum every evening. O Antonio, could you and Filippo know half the blessing you have procured us all !

2. "My Anna now treads in their steps, and is an example of youth, beauty, and grace, internally and externally, which must be and is admired as a most striking blessing not only to her mother, but to many. My two little girls are very good, and know no other language or thoughts but of serving and loving our dear Lord—I do not mean in a religious life, which cannot be judged at their age, but of being his wherever they may be.

3. "The distant hope your letter gives that there is a possibility of your coming to this country, is a light to my gloomy prospects for my poor children ; not for their temporal good : our Lord knows I would never grieve to see them even beggars, if they preserve and practise their faith ; but their prospect, in case of my death, is as desolate as it can be, unless they are given up to their old friends, which would be almost their certain ruin of principle.

4. "I give all up, you may be sure, to Him who feeds the birds of heaven, as you say ; but in the weak and decaying state of my health, which is almost broken down, can I look at the five without the fears and forebodings of a mother, whose only thought or desire is for their eternity ? Our blessed Cheverus seemed to have many hopes of them when he came to see us last winter, and encouraged me to believe he would do all he could for their protection. To him and your Filicchi hearts I commit them in this world.

5. "Our success in having obtained the confidence of so many respectable parents, who have committed the whole charge of their children to us, to the number of about fifty, besides poor children who have not means of education, has enabled us to get on very well without debt or embarrassment, and I hope our Adored has already done a great deal through our establishment.

6. "The Rev. Superior of St. Mary's in Baltimore, who was our first director, has zealously endeavored to do a great deal more; but he did not find me as ready as converts generally are, as I had to include the consideration of my poor children in my religious character, which has greatly pleased and satisfied our blessed Cheverus and Archbishop Carroll, who is now more my protector than ever,—more truly attached to us, and finally takes the superior charge of our house, which at first he had bestowed on another: so that every thing I do or act, even in points less material, is and will be solely directed by them. . . . O Filicchi! how is the blessing you most love increased and increasing in our wooden land, as you used to call it! Blessed, a thousand times blessed, be His holy name forever!

7. "You direct your letter to Baltimore, but we are fifty miles from it, in the midst of woods and mountains. If we had but the dear Christian children and their father and mother, it would be an earthly paradise to me. No wars or rumors of wars here, but fields ripe with harvest; the mountain church, St. Mary's, the village church, St. Joseph's, and our spacious log-house, containing a private chapel (our Adored always there), is all our riches; and old Bony would not covet them; though one of the most eloquent and elegant orators at the bar of New York wrote our poor Harriet, among other reasons why she should not listen 'to the siren voice of her sister,' that in a few years every Catholic building should be razed to the ground, and our house shortly be pulled about our ears. That would be odd enough in the land of liberty.

8. "Will you tell your most honored brother that my prayers shall not now go beyond the grave for him, but will be equally constant? All the children go to communion once a month, except little Rebecca (Annina once a week), and believe me their mother's example and influence is not wanting to excite every devotion of gratitude and lively affection for their true and dearest friends and best of fathers, through whom they have received a real life, and been brought to the light of everlasting life. Our whole family, sisters and all, make our cause their own, and many, many communions have been and will be offered for you both, by souls who have no hope of knowing you but in heaven.

9. "Eternity, eternity, my brother! Will I pass it with you? So much has been given, which not only I never deserved, but have done every thing to provoke the adorable hand to withhold from me, that I even dare hope for that, that which I forever ask as the dearest, most desired favor. If I never write you again from this world, pray for me continually. If I am heard in the next, O Antonio, what would I not obtain for you, your Filippo, and all yours! . . . May the blessings you bestow on us be rewarded to you a thousand times! Ever yours."

10. The blessings, however, enjoyed by the inmates of St. Joseph's, and the usefulness of the institution, would not have been permanent, without increased and strenuous exertions on the part of Mother Seton. The maintenance of the house found a provision in the income from the board and tuition of the pupils; but the debts contracted by the improvement of their property were yet to be liquidated, and threatened to place it in a very embarrassing position.

11. To avert the destruction of the institution, Mother Seton privately appealed to the liberality of friends, among whom General Robert G. Harper was conspicuous, both for the interest he manifested in the welfare of St. Joseph's house, and for the eminence of his position in society.¹ The following letter, addressed to him by Mother Seton, will serve to show the difficulties she had to contend with, and the eloquence of her pen in pleading the cause of religion and humanity :

¹ General Harper, son-in-law of Charles Carroll of Carrollton, was one of the most gifted orators of the American Bar. Some of his speeches have been published in 3 vols., 8vo.

12. "Will you permit the great distance between us to be forgotten, for a moment, and suffer the force of those sentiments which your liberality and kindness to us have created, to act without reserve in speaking to you on a subject I believe you think interesting? The promising and amiable perspective of establishing a house of plain and useful education, retired from the extravagance of the world, connected also with the view of providing nurses for the sick and poor, an abode of innocence and refuge of affliction, is, I fear, now disappearing under the pressure of debts contracted at its very foundation.

13. "Having received the pensions of our boarders in advance, and with them obliged not only to maintain ourselves, but also to discharge the endless demands of carpenters and workmen, we are reduced now to our credit, which is poor indeed. The credit of twenty poor women, who are capable only of earning their daily bread, is but a small stock, particularly when their flour-merchant, grocer, and butcher, are more already in advance than they are willing to afford.

14. "What is our resource? If we sell our house to pay our debts, we must severally return to our separate homes. Must it be so, or will a friendly hand assist us, become our guardian protector, plead our cause with the rich and powerful, serve the cause of humanity, and be a father to the poor? Would Mrs. Harper be interested for us, or is this an extravagant dream of female fancy? Oh, no; Mrs. Harper has a heart of pity,—she has proved it, unsolicited. If we were relieved but from a momentary embarrassment, her name would be blessed by future generations; for, so simple and unpretending is our object, we cannot fail of success if not crushed in our beginning. The Rev. Mr. Dubourg has exerted himself continually for us, and bestowed all he could personally give. From him we are to expect no more.

15. "What shall we do? How dare I ask you, dear sir, the question? But, if addressing it to you gives you a moment's displeasure, forgive; and, considering it as any other occurrence of life which is differently judged of according to the light in which it is viewed, then blot it out, and be assured, whatever may be your impression of it, it arose from a heart filled with the sentiment of your generosity, and overflowing with gratitude and respect. Dear Mrs. Harper, tell your sweet nieces to look at the price of a shawl or veil, and think of the poor family of St. Joseph's. December 28th, 1811."

16. Happily for religion and society, the institution was rescued from its impending danger by the timely aid of its friends; and though it had to struggle on amidst difficulties and trials, it gradually became more and more consolidated, and an instrument of great and extensive good in the hands of Divine Providence.

39. THE PARROT.

CAMPBELL.

THOMAS CAMPBELL, a native of Scotland, died in 1844. His principal poems are the "Pleasures of Hope," and "Gertrude of Wyoming;" but his genius is seen to greater advantage in his shorter poems, such as "The Exile of Erin," "O'Connor's Child," "Lochiel's Warning," "Hohenlinden," "The Battle of the Baltic," &c. These are matchless poems, containing a magic of expression that fastens the words forever upon the memory. No poet of our times has contributed so much, in proportion to the extent of his writings, to that stock of established quotations which pass from lip to lip and from pen to pen, without thought as to their origin.

1. THE deep affections of the breast,
That Heaven to living things imparts,
Are not exclusively possess'd
By human hearts.
2. A parrot, from the Spanish Main,
Full young, and early caged, came o'er,
With bright wings, to the bleak domain
Of Mulla's shore.
3. To spicy groves where he had won
His plumage of resplendent hue,
His native fruits, and skies, and sun,
He bade adieu.

4. For these he-changed the smoke of turf,
A heathery land and misty sky,
And turn'd on rocks and raging surf
His golden eye.
5. But, petted, in our climate cold
He lived and chatter'd many a day ;
Until with age, from green and gold,
His wings grew gray.
6. At last, when, seeming blind and dumb,
He scolded, laugh'd, and spoke no more,
A Spanish stranger chanced to come
To Mulla's shore.
7. He hail'd the bird in Spanish speech ;
The bird in Spanish speech replied,
Flapp'd round his cage with joyous screech,
Dropp'd down, and died.¹

40. PORTRAIT OF A VIRTUOUS AND ACCOMPLISHED WOMAN.

FÉNELON.

FRANCIS DE SALIGNAC DE LA MOTHE FENELON, archbishop of Cambray, in France, was born at Perigord, 1651 ; died, at Cambray, 1715. No prelate of the Church, in any age, has left behind a greater name than Fénelon. It was truly said of him, that he was one of the meekest and most amiable of men. His works are numerous, and in high repute. They are chiefly on spiritual subjects. Those best known to the English reader, are the "Adventures of Telemachus," "Treatise on the Education of a Daughter," and "Treatise on the Love of God."

1. ANTIOPE is mild, simple, and wise ; her hands despise not labor ; she foresees things at a distance ; she provides against all contingencies ; she knows when it is proper to be silent ; she acts regularly and without hurry ; she is continually employed, but never embarrassed, because she does every thing in its proper season.

¹ The above poem records an incident which actually took place.

2. The good order of her father's house is her glory, it adds greater lustre to her than beauty. Though the care of all lies upon her, and she is charged with the burden of reproof, refusing, retrenching (things which make almost all women hated), yet she has acquired the love of all the household; and this, because they do not find in her either passion, or conceitedness, or levity, or humors as in other women. By a single glance of her eye, they know her meaning, and are afraid to displease her.

3. The orders she gives are precise; she commands nothing but what can be performed; she reproves with kindness, and in reproof encourages. Her father's heart reposes upon her as a traveller, fainting beneath the sun's sultry ray, reposes himself upon the tender grass under a shady tree.

4. Antiope is a treasure worth seeking in the most remote corners of the earth. Neither her person nor her mind is set off with vain ornaments; and her imagination, though lively, is restrained by her discretion. She never speaks but through necessity; and when she opens her mouth, soft persuasion and simple graces flow from her lips. When she speaks, every one is silent; and she is heard with such attention, that she blushes, and is almost inclined to suppress what she intended to say; so that she is rarely ever heard to speak at any length.

41. EXECUTION OF MARY, QUEEN OF SCOTS.

MISS AGNES STRICKLAND.

AGNES STRICKLAND is the author of "Lives of the Queens of England and Scotland." As a biographer, she is noted for her careful and erudite researches, and is generally considered impartial. In her "Life of Mary Stuart," she forcibly vindicates the persecuted, traduced, and beautiful queen from the dark imputations from which even Mary's friends have not always sufficiently defended her memory. Miss Strickland is a native of England.

1. BEFORE Mary proceeded further in her preparations for the block, she took a last farewell of her weeping maidens, kissing, embracing, and blessing them, by signing them with the cross, which benediction they received on their knees.

2. Her upper garments being removed, she remained in her petticoat of crimson velvet and camisole, which laced behind, and covered her arms with a pair of crimson-velvet sleeves. Jane Kennedy now drew from her pocket the gold-bordered handkerchief Mary had given her to bind her eyes. With this she placed a Corpus Christi cloth—probably the same in which the consecrated wafer sent to her by the Pope had been enveloped. Jane folded it corner-wise, kissed it, and with trembling hands prepared to execute this last office; but she and her companion burst into a fresh paroxysm of hysterical sobbing and crying.

3. Mary placed her finger on her lips reprovingly. "Hush!" said she; "I have promised for you. Weep not, but pray for me." When they had pinned the handkerchief over the face of their beloved mistress, they were compelled to withdraw from the scaffold; and "she was left alone to close up the tragedy of life by herself, which she did with her wonted courage and devotion." Kneeling on the cushion, she repeated, in her usual clear, firm voice, In te Domine speravi—"In thee, Lord, have I hoped; let me never be put to confusion."

4. Being then guided by the executioners to find the block, she bowed her head upon it intrepidly, exclaiming, as she did so, In manus tuas—"Into thy hands, O Lord, I commend my spirit." The Earl of Shrewsbury raised his baton, in performance of his duty as Earl Marshal, to give the signal for the coup-de-grâce; but he averted his head at the same time, and covered his face with his hand, to conceal his agitation and streaming tears.

5. A momentary pause ensued; for the assistant-executioner perceived that the queen, grasping the block firmly with both hands, was resting her chin upon them, and that they must have been mangled or cut off if he had not removed them, which he did by drawing them down and holding them tightly in his own, while his companion struck her with the axe a cruel, but ineffectual blow. Agitated alike by the courage of the royal victim, and the sobs and groans of the sympathizing spectators, he missed his aim and inflicted a deep wound on the side of the skull.

6. She neither screamed nor stirred, but her sufferings were too sadly testified by the convulsion of her features, when, after the third blow, the butcherwork was accomplished, and the severed head, streaming with blood, was held up to the gaze of the people. "God save Queen Elizabeth!" cried the executioner. "So let all her enemies perish!" exclaimed the Dean of Peterborough. One solitary voice alone responded "Amen!"—it was that of the Earl of Kent. The silence, the tears, and groans of the witnesses of the tragedy, yea, even of the very assistants in it, proclaimed the feelings with which it had been regarded.

7. Mary's weeping ladies now approached, and besought the executioners "not to strip the corpse of their beloved mistress, but to permit her faithful servants to fulfil her last request, by covering it as modesty required, and removing it to her bedchamber, where themselves and her other ladies would perform the last duties." But they were rudely repulsed, hurried out of the hall, and locked into a chamber, while the executioners, intent only on securing what they considered their perquisites, began, with ruffian hands, to despoil the still warm and palpitating remains.

8. One faithful attendant, however, lingered, and refused to be thrust away. Mary's little Skye terrier had followed her to the scaffold unnoticed, had crept closer to her when she laid her head on the block, and was found crouching under her garments, saturated with her blood. It was only by violence he could be removed, and then he went and lay between her head and body, moaning piteously.

9. Some barbarous fanatic, desiring to force a verification of Knox's favorite comparison between this unfortunate princess and Jezebel, tried to tempt the dog to lap the blood of his royal mistress; but, with intelligence beyond that of his species, the sagacious creature refused; nor could he be induced to partake of food again, but pined himself to death.

10. The head was exposed on a black velvet cushion to the view of the populace in the court-yard for an hour, from the large window in the hall. No feeling but that of sympathy for her and indignation against her murderers was elicited by this woful spectacle. The remains of this injured princess were contemptuously covered with the old cloth that had been torn from the billiard-table, and carried into a large upper chamber, where the process of embalming was performed the following day by surgeons from Stamford and Peterborough.

42. THE CONSTANCY OF NATURE.

DANA.

R. H. DANA, born at Cambridge, Mass., 1787, ranks high as a poet, and is surpassed by none of our prose writers in the clearness, purity and classic grace of his style and diction.

1. How like eternity doth nature seem
To life of man—that short and fitful dream !
I look around me : nowhere can I trace
Lines of decay that mark our human race.
These are the murmuring waters, these the flowers
I mused o'er in my earlier, better hours.
Like sounds and scents of yesterday they come.
Long years have past since this was last my home !
And I am weak, and toil-worn is my frame ;
But all this vale shuts in is still the same :
'Tis I alone am changed ; they know me not :
I feel a stranger—or as one forgot.
2. The breeze that cool'd my warm and youthful brow,
Breathes the same freshness on its wrinkles now.
The leaves that flung around me sun and shade,
While gazing idly on them, as they play'd,
Are holding yet their frolic in the air ;
The motion, joy, and beauty still are there,
But not for me ;—I look upon the ground :
Myriads of happy faces throng me round,
Familiar to my eye ; yet heart and mind
In vain would now the old communion find.
Ye were as living, conscious beings then,
With whom I talk'd—But I have talk'd with men !

With uncheer'd sorrow, with cold hearts I've met;
Seen honest minds by harden'd craft beset.
Seen hope cast down, turn deathly pale its glow;
Seen virtue rare, but more of virtue's show

43. THE HUMMING-BIRD.

AUDUBON.

JOHN J. AUDUBON was born in Louisiana, in 1780. His "Birds of America," in seven imperial octavo volumes, was pronounced by the great Cuvier the most splendid monument which art has erected to ornithology. He died in 1851.

1. WHERE is the person, who on observing this glittering fragment of the rainbow, would not pause, admire, and instantly turn his mind with reverence towards the Almighty Creator, the wonders of whose hand we at every step discover, and of whose sublime conceptions we everywhere observe the manifestations in his admirable system of creation? There breathes not such a person; so kindly have we all been blessed with that intuitive and noble feeling—admiration.

2. No sooner has the returning sun again introduced the vernal season, and caused millions of plants to expand their leaves and blossoms to his genial beams, than the little humming-bird is seen advancing on fairy wings, carefully visiting every opening flower-cup, and, like a curious florist, removing from each the injurious insect that otherwise would ere long cause their beauteous petals to droop and decay.

3. Poised in the air, it is observed peeping cautiously, and with sparkling eye, into their innermost recesses, while the ethereal motions of its pinions, so rapid and so light, appear to fan and cool the flower, without injuring its fragile texture and produce a delightful murmuring sound, well adapted for lulling the insects to repose. . . . The prairies, the fields, the orchards, the gardens, nay the deepest shades of the forest are all visited in their turn, and everywhere the little bird meets with pleasure and with food.

4. Its gorgeous throat in brilliancy and beauty baffles all competition. Now it glows with a fiery hue, and again it is changed to the deepest velvety black. The upper parts of its delicate body are of resplendent changing green; and it throws itself through the air with a swiftness and vivacity hardly conceivable. It moves from one flower to another like a gleam of light, upward, downward, to the right, and to the left. In this manner it searches the extreme northern portions of our country, following, with great precaution, the advances of the season, and retreats, with equal care, at the approach of Autumn.

44. DESCRIPTION OF NATURE IN THE CHRISTIAN FATHERS.

HUMBOLDT.

ALEXANDER VON HUMBOLDT, a German baron, born in Berlin, 1769, and died in 1859, the most distinguished savant of the nineteenth century. He was the author of many profound and erudite works on natural and scientific subjects.

1. At the period when the feeling died away which had animated classical antiquity, and directed the minds of men to a visible manifestation of human activity rather than to a passive contemplation of the external world, a new spirit arose. Christianity gradually diffused itself, and wherever it was adopted as the religion of the State, it not only exercised a beneficial influence on the condition of the lower classes by inculcating the social freedom of mankind, but also expanded the views of men in their communion with nature. The eye no longer rested on forms of the Olympic gods. The Fathers of the Church, in their rhetorically correct and often poetically imaginative language, now taught that the Creator showed himself in inanimate no less than in animate nature, and in the wild strife of the elements, no less than in the still activity of organic development.

2. At the gradual dissolution of the Roman dominion, creative imagination, simplicity, and purity of diction, disappeared from the writings of that dreary age; first in the Latin territories, and then in Grecian Asia Minor. A taste for solitude, for mournful contemplation, and for a moody absorption of mind, may be traced simultaneously, in the style and coloring of the language.

3. Whenever a new element seems to develop itself in the feelings of mankind, it may almost invariably be traced to an earlier, deep-seated, individual germ. Thus the softness of Minnervus has often been regarded as the expression of a general sentimental direction of the mind. The ancient world is not abruptly separated from the modern, but modifications in the religious sentiments and the tenderest social feelings of men, and changes in the special habits of those who exercise an influence on the ideas of the mass, must give a sudden predominance to that which might previously have escaped attention.

4. It was the tendency of the Christian mind to prove from the order of the universe, and the beauty of nature, the greatness and goodness of the Creator. This tendency to glorify the Deity in his works gave rise to a taste for natural descriptions. The earliest and most remarkable instances of this kind are to be met with in the writings of Minucius Felix, a rhetorician and lawyer at Rome, who lived in the beginning of the third century, and was the contemporary of Tertullian and Philostratus.

5. We follow with pleasure the delineation of his twilight rambles on the shore near Ostia, which he describes as more picturesque, and more conducive to health, than we find it in the present day. In the religious discourse entitled Octavius, we meet with a spirited defence of the new faith against the attacks of a heathen friend.

6. The present would appear to be a fitting place to introduce some fragmentary examples of the descriptions of nature, which occur in the writings of the Greek fathers, and which are probably less known to my readers than the evidences afforded by Roman authors, of the love of nature entertained by the ancient Italians.

7. I will begin with a letter of Basil the Great, for which I have long cherished a special predilection. Basil, who was born at Cesarea, in Cappadocia, renounced the pleasures of Athens when not more than thirty years old, and, after visiting the Christian hermitages in Caelo-Syria and Upper Egypt, retired to a desert on the shores of the Armenian river Iris. He thus writes to Gregory of Nazianzen :

8. "I believe I may at last flatter myself with having found the end of my wanderings. The hopes of being united with thee—or I should rather say, my pleasant dreams, for hopes have been justly termed the waking dreams of men—have remained unfulfilled. God has suffered me to find a place, such as has often flitted before our imaginations; for that which fancy has shown us from afar is now made manifest to me. A high mountain, clothed with thick woods, is watered to the north by fresh and overflowing streams; at its foot lies an extended plain rendered fruitful by the vapors with which it is moistened; the surrounding forest, crowded with trees of different kinds, incloses me as in a strong fortress.

9. "This wilderness is bounded by two deep ravines: on the one side the river rushing in foam down the mountain, forms an almost impassable barrier; while on the other, all access is impeded by a broad mountain ridge. My hut is so situated on the summit of the mountain, that I can overlook the whole plain, and follow throughout its course, the Iris, which is more beautiful, and has a more abundant body of water, than the Strymon near Amphipolis.

10. "The river of my wilderness, which is more impetuous than any other that I know of, breaks against the jutting rock, and throws itself foaming into the abyss below; an object of admiration to the mountain wanderer, and a source of profit to the natives, from the numerous fishes that are found in its waters. Shall I describe to thee the fructifying vapors that rise from the moist earth, or the cool breezes wafted over the rippled face of the waters?

11. "Shall I speak of the sweet song of the birds, or of the rich luxuriance of the flowering plants? What charms me beyond all else, is the calmness of this spot. It is only visited occasionally by huntsmen; for my wilderness nourishes herds of deer and wild goats, but not bears and wolves. What other spot could I exchange for this? Alemacon, when he had found the Echinades, would not wander farther."

12. In this simple description of scenery and of forest life, feelings are expressed which are more intimately in unison with those of modern times, than any thing that has been transmitted to us from Greek or Roman antiquity. From the lonely Alpine hut, to which St. Basil withdrew, the eye wanders over the humid and leafy roof of the forest below. The place of rest, which he and his friend Gregory of Nazianzen had long desired, is at length found. The poetic and mythical allusion at the close of the letter falls on the Christian ear like an echo from another and earlier world.

13. Basil's Homilies on the Hexæmeron also give evidence of his love of nature. He describes the mildness of the constantly clear nights of Asia Minor, where, according to his expression, the stars, "those everlasting blossoms of heaven," elevate the soul from the visible to the invisible.

14. When in the myth of the Creation, he would praise the beauty of the sea, he describes the aspect of the boundless ocean-plain, in all its varied and ever-changing conditions, "gently moved by the breath of heaven, altering its hue as it reflects the beams of light in their whiter blue, or roseate hues, and caressing the shores in peaceful sport." We meet with the same sentimental and plaintive expressions regarding nature in the writings of Gregory of Nyssa, the brother of Basil the Great.

15. "When," he exclaims, "I see every ledge of rock, every valley and plain, covered with new-born verdure ; the varied beauty of the trees, and the lilies at my feet decked by nature with the double charms of perfume and of color ; when in the distance I see the ocean, toward which the clouds are onward borne, my spirit is overpowered by a sadness not wholly devoid of enjoyment.

16. "When in autumn, the fruits have passed away, the leaves have fallen, and the branches of the trees, dried and shrivelled, are robbed of their leafy adornments, we are instinctively led, amid the everlasting and regular change of nature, to feel the harmony of the wondrous powers pervading all things. He who contemplates them with the eye of the soul, feels the littleness of man amid the greatness of the Universe."

17. While the Greek Christians were led by their adoration of the Deity, through the contemplation of his works, to a poetic delineation of nature, they were at the same time, during the earlier ages of their new belief, and owing to the peculiar bent of their minds, full of contempt for all works of human art. Thus Chrysostom abounds in passages like the following :

18. "If the aspect of the colonnades of sumptuous buildings could lead thy spirit astray, look upward to the vault of heaven, and around thee on the open fields, in which herds graze by the water's side. Who does not despise all the creations of art, when, in the stillness of his spirit, he watches with admiration the rising of the sun, as it pours its golden light over the face of the earth ; when, resting on the thick grass beside the murmuring spring, or beneath the sombre shade of a thick and leafy tree, the eye rests on the far-receding and hazy distance ?"

19. Antioch was at that time surrounded by hermitages, in one of which lived Chrysostom. It seemed as if Eloquence had discovered her element—freedom—from the fount of nature in the mountain regions of Syria and Asia Minor, which were then covered with forests.

45. THE VIRGIN MARTYR.

MASSINGER.

PHILIP MASSINGER was born at Salisbury, A. D. 1584. The "Virgin Martyr," the first printed of Massinger's works, appeared in 1622; but there can be little doubt that he had written much before that period. His literary career was a constant struggle, for fortune never smiled upon him. His writings breathe a spirit incomparably nobler and manlier than that of his contemporaries generally; they are wholly free from the servile political maxims, and, in a large measure, from the grave offences against religion and morals with which the stage in his time abounded. Their merit consists less in the vigor with which they delineate passion than in their dignity and refinement of style, and the variety of their versification. Wit they have no pretensions.

The place of execution. Antonius, Theophilus, Dorothea, &c.

Ant.

See, she comes ;—

How sweet her innocence appears ! more like

To Heaven itself than any sacrifice

That can be offer'd to it. By my hopes

Of joys hereafter, the sight makes me doubtful

In my belief ; nor can I think our gods
 Are good, or to be served, that take delight
 In offerings of this kind ; that, to maintain Their power, deface this masterpiece of nature,
 Which they themselves come short of. She ascends,
 And every step raises her nearer heaven !

* * * * *

She smiles,

Unmoved, by Mars ! as if she were assured
 Death, looking on her constancy, would forget
 The use of his inevitable hand.

Theo. Derided too ! Dispatch, I say !

Dor. Thou fool !

Thou gloriest in having power to ravish
 A trifle from me I am weary of.
 What is this life to me ? Not worth a thought.
 Or, if it be esteem'd, 'tis that I lose it
 To win a better : even thy malice serves
 To me but as a ladder to mount up
 To such a height of happiness, where I shall Look down with scorn on thee and on the world ;
 Where, circled with true pleasures, placed above
 The reach of death or time, 'twill be my glory
 To think at what an easy price I bought it.
 There's a perpetual spring, perpetual youth ;
 No joint-benumbing cold, or scorching heat,
 Famine nor age, have any being there.
 Forget for shame your Tempè ; bury in Oblivion your feign'd Hesperian orchards :—
 The golden fruit, kept by the watchful dragon,
 Which did require a Hercules to get it,
 Compared with what grows in all plenty there,
 Deserves not to be named. The Power I serve Laughs at your happy Araby, or the Elysian shades ; for He hath made his bowers
 Better, indeed, than you can fancy yours.

* * * * *

Enter Angelo, in the Angel's habit.

Dor. Thou glorious minister of the Power I serve (For thou art more than mortal), is't for me,
Poor sinner, thou art pleased awhile to leave
Thy heavenly habitation, and vouchsafest,
Though glorified, to take my servant's habit?
For, put off thy divinity, so look'd
My lovely Angelo.

Angelo. Know, I am the same :
And still the servant to your piety.
Your zealous prayers and pious deeds first won me
(But 'twas by His command to whom you sent them)
To guide your steps. I tried your charity,
When, in a beggar's shape, you took me up,
And clothed my naked limbs, and after fed,
As you believed, my famished mouth. Learn all,
By your example, to look on the poor
With gentle eyes ; for in such habits often Angels desire an alms. I never left you,
Nor will I now ; for I am sent to carry
Your pure and innocent soul to joys eternal,
Your martyrdom once suffer'd.

46. QUEEN ELIZABETH OF HUNGARY.

MONTALEMBERT.

COUNT MONTALEMBERT is one of the most distinguished statesmen and noblemen of France. He is cherished by every Catholic heart for his defence of Catholic principles, his opposition to godless education, and steady devotion to the interests of the Church.

1. GENEROSITY to the poor, particularly that exercised by princes, was one of the most remarkable features of the age in which she lived ; but we perceive that in her, charity did not proceed from rank, still less from the desire of acquiring praises or purely human gratitude, but from an interior and heavenly inspiration. From her cradle, she could not bear the sight of a poor person without feeling her heart pierced with grief, and now that her husband had granted her full liberty in all that concerned the honor of God and the good of her neighbor, she unreservedly abandoned herself to her natural inclination to solace the suffering members of Christ.

2. This was her ruling thought each hour and moment : to the use of the poor she dedicated all that she retrenched from the superfluities usually required by her sex and rank. Yet, notwithstanding the resources which the charity of her husband placed at her disposal, she gave away so quickly all that she possessed, that it often happened that she would despoil herself of her clothes in order to have the means of assisting the unfortunate.

3. Elizabeth loved to carry secretly to the poor, not alone money, but provisions and other matters which she destined for them. She went thus laden, by the winding and rugged paths that led from the castle to the city, and to cabins of the neighboring valleys.

4. One day, when accompanied by one of her favorite maidens, as she descended by a rude little path (still pointed out), and carried under her mantle bread, meat, eggs, and other food to distribute to the poor, she suddenly encountered her husband, who was returning from hunting. Astonished to see her thus toiling on under the weight of her burden, he said to her, "Let us see what you carry," and at the same time drew open the mantle which she held closely clasped to her bosom ; but beneath it were only red and white roses, the most beautiful he had ever seen—and this astonished him, as it was no longer the season of flowers.

5. Seeing that Elizabeth was troubled, he sought to console her by his caresses ; but he ceased suddenly, on seeing over her head a luminous appearance in the form of a crucifix. He then desired her to continue her route without being disturbed by him, and he returned to Wartbourg, meditating with recollection on what God did for her, and carrying with him one of these wonderful roses, which he preserved all his life.

6. At the spot where this meeting took place, he erected a pillar, surmounted by a cross, to consecrate forever the remembrance of that which he had seen hovering over the head of his wife. Among the unfortunate who particularly attracted her compassion, those who occupied the greatest part in her heart were the lepers; the mysterious and special character of their malady rendered them, throughout the middle ages, objects of a solicitude and affection mingled with fear.

47. AGES OF FAITH.

BY KENELM H. DIGBY.

KENELM H. DIGBY, in his "Compitum, or Meeting of the Ways," and his "Mores Catholici, or Ages of Faith," devotes all the resources of his profound erudition to the middle ages. The latter work is one of the most remarkable literary productions of our times, for its varied learning, its deep, reverential tone, its sincere and fervent piety, and its noble appreciation of Catholic honor and Catholic heroism. K. H. Digby is a native of England.

1. IN the third stage of this mortal course, if midway be the sixth, and on the joyful day which hears of the great crowd that no man could number, I found me in the cloister of an abbey, whither I had come to seek the grace of that high festival. The hour was day's decline; and already had "Placebo Domino" been sung in solemn tones, to usher in the hours of special charity for those who are of the suffering Church. A harsh sound from the simultaneous closing of as many books, cased in oak and iron, as there were voices in that full choir, like a sudden thunder-crash, announced the end of that ghostly vesper.

2. The saintly men, one by one, slowly walked forth, each proceeding to his special exercise. Door then shutting after door gave long echoes, till all was mute stillness, and I was left alone, under cloistered arches, to meditate on the felicity of blessed spirits, and on the desire which presses both the living and the inmates of that region in which the soul is purged from sinful stain, to join their happy company. Still, I thought I heard them sing of the bright and puissant angel ascending from the rising of the sun—and of the twelve times twelve thousand that were signed; and of the redeemed from every nation and people and language; and of the angels who stood around the throne of Heaven.

3. It seemed now as if I heard a voice like that which said to Dante, "What thou heardest was sung that freely thou mightst open thy heart to the waters of peace, that flow diffused from their eternal fountain." What man is there so brutish and senseless to things divine, as not to have sometimes experienced an interval like that which is described by him who sung of Paradise, to whom the world appeared as if stretched far below his feet, and who saw this globe—

"So pitiful of semblance, that perforce
It moved his smiles; and him in truth did hold
For wisest, who esteems it least—whose thoughts
Elsewhere are fix'd, him worthiest call'd and best?"¹

4. But soon the strained sense will sink back to it—for the human spirit must perforce accomplish, in the first place, its exercise in that school which is to prepare it for the home it anticipates above. Yet I felt not disconsolate nor forgetful of the bright vision. My thoughts were carried backwards to ages which the muse of history had taught me long to love; for it was in obscure and lowly middle-time of saintly annals that multitudes of these bright spirits took their flight from a dark world to the Heavens.

5. The middle ages, then, I said, were ages of highest grace to men—ages of faith—ages when all Europe was Catholic; when vast temples were seen to rise in every place of human concourse, to give glory to God, and to exalt men's souls to sanctity; when houses of holy peace and order were found amidst woods and desolate mountains—on the banks of placid lakes, as well as on the solitary rocks in the ocean; ages of sanctity which witnessed a Bede, an Alcuin, a Bernard, a Francis, and crowds who followed them as they did Christ; ages of vast and beneficent intelligence, in which it pleased the Holy Spirit to display the power of the seven gifts in the lives of an Anselm, a Thomas of Aquinum, and the saintly flocks whose steps a cloister guarded: ages of the highest civil virtue, which gave birth to the laws and institutions of an Edward, a Lewis, a Suger; ages of the noble art, which beheld a Giotto, a Michael Angelo, a Raffaelo, a Dominichino ; ages of poetry, which heard an Avitus, a Caedmon, a Dante, a Shakspeare, a Calderon ; ages of more than mortal heroism, which produced a Tancred and a Godfrey ; ages of majesty, which knew a Charlemagne, an Alfred, and the sainted youth who bore the lily ; ages, too, of England's glory, when she appears, not even excluding a comparison with the Eastern empire, as the most truly civilized country on the globe ; when the sovereign of the greater portion of the western world applied to her schools for instructors—when she sends forth her saints to evangelize the nations of the north, and to diffuse spiritual treasure over the whole world—when heroes flock to her court to behold the models of reproachless chivalry, and emperors leave their thrones to adore God at the tombs of her martyrs ! as Dante says,

¹ Cary's Dante.

“ No tongue
So vast a theme could equal, speech and thought
Both impotent alike.”

6. In a little work which embodied the reflections, the hopes, and even the joys of youthful prime, I once attempted to survey the middle ages in relation to chivalry ; and though in this we had occasion to visit the cloister, and to hear as a stranger who tarries but a night, the counsels of the wise and holy, we were never able to regard the house of peace as our home ; we were soon called away from it to return to the world and to the courts of its princes. Now I propose to commence a course more peaceful and unpretending, for it only supposes that one has left the world, and withdrawn from these vain phantoms of honor and glory, which distract so often the morning of man's day. Thus we read that in youth many have left the cloister, dazzled by the pomp and circumstance of a wild, delusive chivalry, who, after a little while, have hastened back to it, moved by a sense of earthly vanity ; there

“ To finish the short pilgrimage of life,
Still speeding to its close on restless wing.”¹

¹ Dante, Purg. 20.

7. Yes, all is vanity but to love and serve God! Men have found by long experience that nothing but divine love can satisfy that restless craving which ever holds the soul, "finding no food on earth;" that every beauty, every treasure, every joy, must, by the law which rules contingency, vanish like a dream: and that there will remain for every man, sooner or later, the gloom of dark and chaotic night, if he is not provided with a lamp of faith. Those men who, reasoning, went to depth profoundest, came to the same conclusion: they found that the labors of the learned, and the visions of the poet, were not of their own nature different in this respect from the pleasures of sense:

"'Tis darkness all: or shadow of the flesh,
Or else its poison."

48. AGES OF FAITH—continued.

1. THIS was their experience. That labor of the mind, that fond ideal ecstasy, did not necessarily secure the one thing needful—the love of Jesus. In a vast number of instances led to no substantial good: its object was soon forgotten, the mind recurred to the performance with a sense of its imperfections.

2. Still the heart cried, Something more! What, say they, can be given to it? What will content it? Fresh labor? fresh objects? Ah! they had already begun to suspect how little all this would avail; for, in hearkening "the saintly soul, that shows the world's deceitfulness to who hear him," they had learned to know that it might indeed be given to their weakness to feel the cruel discord, but not to set it right—to know that it was but a vain, delusive motive which would excite them to exertion from a desire of pleasing men; for men pass rapidly with the changing scenes of life, and the poor youth, who, mistaking the true end of human labor, had fondly reckoned upon long interchange respect and friendship, at the moment when his hopes are brightest and his affections warmed into ecstasy, wakens suddenly from his sweet protracted dream, and finds himself without honor, without love, without even a remembrance, and virtually in as great solitude as if he were already in his grave!

3. Well might they shudder at the thought of this eternal chilliness, this spiritual isolation, this bitter and unholy state! Truly it was fearful, and something too much for tears! Sweet Jesus, how different would have been their state, if they had sought only to love and serve thee! for thy love alone can give rest and comfort to the heart—a sure and lasting joy:—

Other good

There is, where man finds not his happiness;

It is not true fruition; not that blest

Essence of every good, the branch and root.

4. Changed, then, be the way and object of our research, and let the converse to that which formerly took place hold respecting our employment here; and if we shall again meet with knights and the world's chivalry, let it be only in the way of accident, and, as it were, from the visit of those who pass near our spot of shelter; and let our place of rest henceforth be in the forest and the cell.

5. Times there are, when even the least wise can seize a constant truth—that the heart must be devoted either all to the world, or all to God. When they, too, will pray, and make supplications urged with weeping, that the latter may be their condition in the mortal hour, that they may secure the rest of the saints for eternity.

6. Returning to that cloisteral meditation, how many, thought I, throughout the whole world, have heard this day the grounds and consummation of the saints' felicity! how many have been summoned onward, and told the steps were near, and that now the ascent might be without difficulty gained? and yet,

“A scanty few are they, who, when they hear
Such tidings, hasten. Oh, ye race of men!

Though born to soar, why suffer ye a wind
So slight to baffle ye?"¹

7. But for those who seemed to feel how sweet was that solemn accent, eight times sung, which taught them who were blessed, would it not be well, when left alone, and without distraction, if they were to take up histories, and survey the course which has been trod by saintly feet, and mark, as if from the soul-purifying mount, the ways and works of men on earth, keeping their eyes with fixed observance bent upon the symbol there conveyed, so as to mark how far the form and acts of that life, in ages past, of which there are still so many monuments around them, agreed, not with this or that modern standard of political and social happiness and grandeur, but with what, by Heaven's sufferance, gives title to divine and everlasting beatitude?

8. Such a view would present a varied and immense horizon, comprising the manners, institutions, and spirit of many generations of men long since gone by. We should see in what manner the whole type and form of life were Christian, although its detail may have often been broken and disordered; for instance, how the pursuits of the learned, the consolations of the poor, the riches of the Church, the exercises and dispositions of the young, and the common hope and consolation of all men, harmonized with the character of those that sought to be poor in spirit.

9. How, again, the principle of obedience, the Constitution of the Church, the division of ministration, and the rule of government, the manners and institutions of society, agreed with meekness and inherited its recompense. Further, how the sufferings of just men, and the provisions for a penitential spirit were in accordance with the state of those that were to mourn and weep there.

10. How the character of men in sacred orders, the zeal of the laity, and the lives of all ranks, denoted the hunger and thirst after justice. Again, how the institutions, the foundations, and the recognized principle of perfection, proclaimed men merciful Moreover, how the philosophy which prevailed, and the spiritual monuments which were raised by piety and genius, evinced the clean of heart.

¹ Dante, Parad. 12. Carey's translation.

11. Still further, how the union of nations, and the bond of peace which existed even amid savage discord, wars, and confusion; as also, how the holy retreats for innocence, which then everywhere abounded, marked the multitude of pacific men. And, finally, how the advantage taken of dire events, and the acts of saintly and heroic fame, revealed the spirit which shunned not suffering for sake of justice.

49. THE SHEPHERD'S SONG.

TASSO.

TORQUATO TASSO—an Italian poet of the sixteenth century. He wrote much, but his "Jerusalem Delivered" gained him the greatest renown; during his life it excited universal favor, and has ever since been justly regarded as one of the great poems of the world. "Jerusalem Delivered" is a history of the erusades, related with poetic license.

Clement VIII. invited Tasso to Rome, that he might receive the laurel crown—an honor which had not been conferred upon any one since the days of Petrarch. But scarcely was the day of coronation about to dawn when the poet felt his dissolution approaching. He requested liberty to retire to the monastery of St. Onofrio. On hearing that his last hour was near, he joyfully returned thanks to God for having brought him to so secure a haven. A few days before his death, one of the monks sought to raise his spirits by speaking to him of the triumphal honors preparing for him at the Capitol. Tasso replied—"Glory, glory, nothing but glory. Two souls have reigned in my heart and decided my life—love and that vapor you call glory. The one has always betrayed me; the other, after fleeing for forty years, is ready to-day to crown—what?—a corpse. Laurels for Tasso! It is a winding sheet he requires! I feel too well to-day that on earth is vanity, all but to love and serve God. But," he added, as his head sunk on his breast, "all the rest is not worth a quarter of an hour's trouble." On receiving a plenary indulgence from the Pope, he said—"This was the chariot on which he hoped to go crowned, not with laurel as a poet into the Capitol, but with glory, as a saint, to Heaven." Feeling his mortal hour at hand, he closely embraced the crucifix, and murmuring, "Into thy hands, O Lord!" peacefully resigned his spirit.

1. SAFE stands our simple shed, despised our little store;
Despised by others, but so dear to me,
That gems and crowns I hold in less esteem;
From pride, from avarice, is my spirit free,
And mad ambition's visionary dream.
My thirst I quench in the pellucid stream,

Nor fear lest poison the pure wave pollutes ;
With flocks my fields, my fields with herbage teem ;
My garden-plot supplies nutritious roots ;
And my brown orchard bends with Autumn's wealthiest fruits.

2. Few are our wishes, few our wants ; man needs
But little to preserve the vital spark :
These are my sons ; they keep the flock that feeds,
And rise in the gray morning with the lark.
Thus in my hermitage I live ; now mark
The goats disport amid the budding brooms ;
Now the slim stags bound through the forest dark ;
The fish glide by, the bees hum round the blooms ;
And the birds spread to heaven the splendor of their plumes
3. Time was (these gray hairs then were golden locks),
When other wishes wanton'd in my veins ;
I scorn'd the simple charge of tending flocks,
And fled disgusted from my native plains.
Awhile in Memphis I abode, where reigns
The mighty Caliph ; he admired my port,
And made me keeper of his flower-domains ;
And though to town I rarely made resort,
Much have I seen and known of the intrigues of court.
4. Long by presumptuous hopes was I beguiled,
And many, many a disappointment bore ;
But when with youth false hope no longer smiled,
And the scene pall'd that charm'd so much before,—
I sigh'd for my lost peace, and brooded o'er
The abandoned quiet of this humble shed ;
Then farewell State's proud palaces ! once more
To these delightful solitudes I fled ;
And in their peaceful shades harmonious days have led.

50. WAR OF 1812 AND DEATH OF GEN. BROCK.

1. THE American Government assembled at the Niagara frontiers a force of 6,300 men ; of this force, 3,170 (900 of whom were regular troops) were at Lewiston, under the command of General Van Rensselaer. In the American reports this army is set down at 8,000 strong, with 15 pieces of field ordnance. To oppose this force Major-General Brock had part of the 41st and 49th Regiments, a few companies of militia, and about 200 Indians, in all 1,500 men ; but so dispersed in different posts at and between Fort Erie and Fort George, that only a small number was available at any one point.

2. Before daylight on the morning of the 13th of October, a large division of General Van Rensselaer's army, numbering between 1,300 and 1,400, under Brigadier-General Wadsworth, effected a landing at the lower end of the village of Queenston (opposite Lewiston), and made an attack upon the position, which was defended with the most determined bravery by the two flank companies of the 49th Regiment, commanded by Captains Dennis and Williams, aided by such of the militia forces and Indians as could be collected in the vicinity. Captain Dennis marched his company to the landing place opposite Lewiston, and was soon followed by the light company of the 49th, and the few militia who could be hastily assembled. Here the attempt of the enemy to effect a passage was for some time successfully resisted, and several boats were either disabled or sunk by the fire from the one-gun battery on the heights and that from the masked battery, about a mile below. Several boats were, by the fire from this last battery, so annoyed, that falling before the landing-place, they were compelled to drop down with the current and re-cross to the American side. A considerable force, however, had effected a landing some distance above, and succeeded in gaining the summit of the mountain. No resistance could now be offered to the crossing from Lewiston, except by the battery at Vront's Point, half a mile below, and from this a steady and harassing fire was kept up, which did considerable execution.

3. At this juncture Sir Isaac Brock arrived. He had for days suspected this invasion, and on the preceding evening he called his staff together and gave to each the necessary instructions. Agreeable to his usual custom he rose before daylight, and, hearing the cannonade, awoke Major Glegg, and called for his horse Alfred, which Sir James Craig had presented to him. He then galloped eagerly from Fort George to the scene of action, and with two aides-de-camp passed up the hill at full gallop in front of the light company, under a heavy fire of artillery and musketry from the American shore. On reaching the 18-pounder battery at the top of the hill, they dismounted and took a view of passing events, which at that moment appeared highly favorable. But in a few minutes a firing was heard, which proceeded from a strong detachment of American regulars under Captain Wool, who, as just stated, had succeeded in gaining the brow of the heights in rear of the battery, by a fisherman's path up the rocks which being reported as impossible, was not guarded. Sir Isaac Brock and his aides-de-camp had not even time to remount, but were obliged to retire precipitately with the twelve men stationed in the battery, which was quickly occupied by the enemy. Captain Wool having sent forward about 15 regulars, Captain Williams' detachment of about 100 men advanced to meet them, personally directed by the General who, observing the enemy waver, ordered a charge, which was promptly executed; but as the Americans gave way, the result was not equal to his expectations. Captain Wool sent reinforcement to his regulars, notwithstanding which, the whole was driven to the edge of the bank. Here some of the American officers were on the point of hoisting a white flag with an intention to surrender, when Captain Wool tore it off and reanimated his dispirited troops. They now opened a heavy fire of musketry, and, conspicuous from his cross, height, and the enthusiasm with which he animated his little band, the British commander was soon singled out, and fell about an hour after his arrival.

4. The fatal bullet entered his right breast, and passed through his left side. He had but that instant said, "Pu on the York Volunteers !” and he lived only long enough to request that his fall might not be noticed, or prevent the advance of his brave troops ; adding a wish which could not be distinctly understood, that some token of remembrance should be transmitted to his sister. He died unmarried, and on the same day, a week previously, he had completed his forty-third year. The lifeless corpse was immediately conveyed into a house close by, where it remained until the afternoon, unperceived by the enemy. His Provincial Aide-de-camp, Lieutenant-Colonel McDonell of the militia, and the Attorney-General of Upper Canada, a fine promising young man, was mortally wounded soon after his chief, and died the next day, at the early age of twenty-five years. Although one bullet had passed through his body, and he was wounded in four places, yet he survived twenty hours, and during a period of excruciating agony his thoughts and words were constantly occupied with lamentations for his deceased commander and friend. He fell while gallantly charging up the hill with 190 men, chiefly York Volunteers, by which charge the enemy was compelled to spike the 18-pounder in the battery there.

50½. THE BATTLE OF QUEENSTON HEIGHTS.

1. At this time, about two in the afternoon, the whole British and Indian force thus assembled was about 1,000 men, of whom 600 were regulars. In numbers the Americans were about equal—courage they had, but they wanted the confidence and discipline of British soldiers.

2. After carefully reconnoitering, Gen. Sheaffe, who had arrived from Fort George, and who had now assumed the command, commenced the attack by an advance of his left flank, composed of the light company of the 41st, under Lieutenant McIntyre, supported by a body of militia and Indians. After a volley, the bayonet was resorted to, and the American right driven in. The main body now advanced under cover of the fire from the two three-pounders, and after a short conflict forced the Americans over the first ridge of the heights to the road leading from Queenston to the Falls. The fight was maintained on both sides with courage truly heroic. The British regulars and militia charged in rapid succession until they succeeded in turning the left flank of the enemy's column, which rested on the summit of the hill. The Americans who attempted to escape into the woods were quickly driven back by the Indians ; and many, cut off in their return to the main body, and terrified by the sight of these exasperated warriors, flung themselves wildly over the cliffs, and endeavored to cling to the bushes which grew upon them ; but some, losing their hold, were dashed frightfully on the rocks beneath ; while others, who reached the river, perished in their attempts to swim across it. The event of the day no longer appeared doubtful.

3. Major-General Van Rensselaer, commanding the American army, perceiving his reinforcements embarking very slowly, recrossed the river to accelerate their movements ; but, to his utter astonishment, he found that at the very moment when their services were most required, the ardor of the unengaged troops had entirely subsided. General Van Rensselaer rode in all directions through the camp, urging his men by every consideration to pass over. Lieutenant-Colonel Bloome, who had been wounded in the action and recrossed the river, together with Judge Peck, who happened to be in Lewiston at the time, mounted their horses and rode through the camp, exhorting the companies to proceed, but all in vain. Crowds of the United States militia remained on the American bank of the river, to which they had not been marched in any order, but ran as a mob ; not one of them would cross. They had seen the wounded recrossing ; they had seen the Indians ; and they had seen the "green tigers," as they called the 49th from their green facings, and were panic struck. There were those to be found in the American ranks who, at this critical juncture, could talk of the Constitution and the right of the militia to refuse crossing the imaginary line which separates the two countries.

4. General Van Rensselaer having found that it was impossible to urge a single man to cross the river to reinforce the army on the heights, and that army having nearly expended its ammunition, boats were immediately sent to cover their retreat ; but a desultory fire which was maintained upon the ferry from a battery on the bank at the lower end of Queenston, completely dispersed the boats, and many of the boatmen relanded and fled in dismay. Brigadier-General Wadsworth was, therefore, compelled, after a vigorous conflict had been maintained for some time upon both sides, to surrender himself and all his officers and 900 men between three and four o'clock in the afternoon.

5. The loss of the British army was 16 killed and 69 wounded ; while that on the side of the Americans was not less than 900 men, made prisoners, and one gun and two colors taken, and 90 killed and about 100 wounded. But amongst the killed of the British army, the government and the country had to deplore the loss of one of their bravest and most zealous generals in Sir Isaac Brock, and one whose memory will long live in the warmest affections of every Canadian and British subject. The country had also to deplore the loss of the eminent services and talents of Lieutenant-colonel McDonell, Provincial Aide-de-camp and Attorney-general of the Province, whose gallantry and merit rendered him worthy of his chief.

6. The gratitude of the people of Canada to the memory of Brock was manifested in an enduring form. They desired to perpetuate the memory of the hero who had been the instrument of their deliverance, and they were not slow in executing their design ; and whilst his noble deeds were still fresh in the memory of all, the Provincial Legislature erected a lofty column on the Queenston heights, near the spot where he fell. The height of the monument from the base to the summit was 135 feet ; and from the level of the Niagara River, which runs nearly under it, 485 feet. The monument was a Tuscan column on rustic pedestal, with a pedestal for a statue ; the diameter of the base of the column was $17\frac{1}{2}$ feet, and the abacus of the capital was surmounted by an iron railing. The centre shaft containing the spiral staircase was ten feet in diameter.

7. On Good Friday, the 17th of April, 1840, a vagabond of the name of Lett introduced a quantity of gunpowder into the monument with the fiendish purpose of destroying it, and the explosion effected by a train caused so much damage as to render the column altogether irreparable. Lett had been compelled to fly into the United States for his share in the rebellion of 1837, and well knowing the feeling of attachment to the name and memory of General Brock which pervaded all classes of Canadians, he sought to gratify his malicious and vindictive spirit, and at the same time to wound and insult the people of Canada by this atrocious deed.

8. After the first monument had remained in the dilapidated condition to which it was reduced for some years, a new and beautiful column has a short time ago been raised on its site. It is thus described :

9. Upon the solid rock is built a foundation, 40 feet square and 10 feet thick, of massive stone ; upon this the structure stands in a grooved plinth or sub-basement 38 feet square and 27 feet in height, and has an eastern entrance by a massive oak door and bronze pateras, forming two galleries to the interior 114 feet in extent, round the inner pedestal, on the north and south sides of which, in vaults under the ground floor, are deposited the remains of General Brock, and those of his aide-de-camp, Colonel McDonell, in massive stone sarcophagi. On the exterior angles of the sub-basement are placed lions rampant 7 feet in height, supporting shields with the armorial bearings of the hero.

10. The column is of the Roman composite order 95 feet in height, a fluted shaft, 10 feet diameter at the base ; the loftiest column known of this style ; the lower one enriched with laurel leaves, and the flutes terminating on the base with palms.

11. The height from the ground to the top of the statue is 190 feet, exceeding that of any monumental column, ancient or modern, known, with the exception of that on Fish-street Hill, London, England, by Sir Christopher Wren, architect, in commemoration of the great fire of 1666, 202 feet high, which exceeds it in height by 12 feet.

51. ADVICE TO A YOUNG CRITIC.

POPE.

ALEXANDER POPE will always be popular while the English language remains as it is. One of his merits was to mould the language of poetry into pliancy and softness:—before his time there was much ruggedness in the diction even of the most celebrated poets. Some of his pieces are repulsive to the sentiments of religion and morals. He died in 1744.

1. 'Tis not enough, taste, judgment, learning join ;
In all you speak, let truth and candor shine ;
That not alone what to your sense is due
All may allow, but seek your friendship too.
Be silent always, when you doubt your sense,
And speak, though sure, with seeming diffidence.
2. Some positive, persisting fops we know,
Who, if once wrong, will needs be always so :
But you, with pleasure, own your errors past,
And make each day a critic on the last.
'Tis not enough your counsel to be true :
Blunt truths more mischief than slight errors do ;
Men must be taught, as if you taught them not,
And things unknown proposed, as things forgot.
3. Without good breeding truth is disapproved ;
That only makes superior sense beloved.
Be niggard of advice on no pretence ;
For the worst avarice is that of sense.
With mean complacence ne'er betray your trust,
Nor be so civil as to prove unjust.
Fear not the anger of the wise to raise ;
Those best can bear reproof, who merit praise.
4. But where's the man who counsel can bestow,
Still pleased to teach, and yet not proud to know ;
Unbiass'd, or by favor, or by spite ;
Not dully prepossess'd, nor blindly right ;
Though learn'd, well-bred ; and, though well-bred, sincere ;
Modestly bold, and humanly severe ;

Who to a friend his faults can freely show,
And gladly praise the merit of a foe?

5. Blest with a taste exact, yet unconfined ;
A knowledge both of books and human kind ;
Generous converse, a soul exempt from pride,
And love to praise with reason on his side ;
Careless of censure, nor too fond of fame ;
Still pleased to praise, yet not afraid to blame ;
Averse alike to flatter or offend ;
Not free from faults, nor yet too vain to mend ?

52. LOSS AND GAIN.

DR. NEWMAN.

JOHN HENRY NEWMAN, D.D., superior of the Oratory in England, born 21st February, 1801. In 1845 he became a convert to the Catholic faith, and was ordained priest in Rome, May 26, 1847. He was appointed first rector of the Catholic University of Ireland, which office he filled for several years. Dr. Newman is undoubtedly one of the leading minds of the present century. His English style is unrivalled in any age for majesty, copiousness, and long-drawn but sustained harmony. His learning is quite a marvel among Englishmen, and is united with a profound and subtle analytic genius. "Loss and Gain," and "Callista," are works of fiction in which he has displayed as singular a versatility.

1. THE conversation flagged ; Bateman was again busy with his memory, and he was getting impatient, too ; time was slipping away, and no blow struck. Moreover, Willis was beginning to gape, and Charles seemed impatient to be released. "These Romanists put things so plausibly," he said to himself, "but very unfairly, most unfairly ; one ought to be up to their dodges. I dare say, if the truth were known Willis has had lessons ; he looks so demure. I dare say he is keeping back a great deal, and playing upon my ignorance. Who knows ? perhaps he's a concealed Jesuit."

2. It was an awful thought, and suspended the course of his reflections some seconds. "I wonder what he does really think ; it's so difficult to get at the bottom of them ; they won't tell tales, and they are under obedience ; one never knows when to believe them. I suspect he has been wofull disappointed with Romanism, he looks so thin ; but of course he won't say so : it hurts a man's pride, and he likes to be consistent ; he doesn't like to be laughed at, and so he makes the best of things.

3. "I wish I knew how to treat him ; I was wrong in having Reding here ; of course Willis would not be confidential before a third person. He's like the fox that lost his tail. It was bad tact in me ; I see it now ; what a thing it is to have tact ! it requires very delicate tact. There are so many things I wish to say about Indulgences, about their so seldom communicating ; I think I must ask him about the Mass." So, after fidgeting a good deal within, while he was ostensibly employed in making tea, he commenced his last assault.

4. "Well, we shall have you back again among us by next Christmas, Willis," he said ; "I can't give you greater law ; I am certain of it ; it takes time, but slow and sure. What a joyful time it will be ! I can't tell what keeps you ; you are doing nothing ; you are flung into a corner ; you are wasting life. What keeps you ?" Willis looked odd ; and then simply answered, "Grace." Bateman was startled, but recovered himself ; "Heaven forbid," he said, "that I should treat these things lightly, or interfere with you unduly.

5. "I know, my dear friend, what a serious fellow you are ; but do tell me, just tell me, how can you justify the Mass, as it is performed abroad ? how can it be called a 'reasonable service,' when all parties conspire to gabble it over ; as if it mattered not a jot who attended to it, or even understood it ? Speak, man, speak," he added, gently shaking him by the shoulder.

6. "These are such difficult questions," answered Willis ; "must I speak ? Such difficult questions," he continued, rising into a more animated manner, and kindling as he went on ; "I mean, people view them so differently ; it is so difficult to convey to one person the idea of another. The idea of worship is different in the Catholic Church from the idea of it in your Church ; for, in truth, the religions are different. Don't deceive yourself, my dear Bateman," he said tenderly, "it is not that ours is your religion carried a little farther—a little too far, as you would say. No, they differ in kind, not in degree ; ours is one religion, yours another.

7. "And when the time comes, and come it will for you, alien as you are now, to submit yourself to the gracious yoke of Christ, then, my dearest Bateman, it will be faith which will enable you to bear the ways and usages of Catholics, which else might perhaps startle you. Else, the habits of years, the associations in your mind of a certain outward behavior, with real inward acts of devotion, might embarrass you, when you had to conform yourself to other habits, and to create for yourself other associations. But this faith, of which I speak, the great gift of God, will enable you in that day to overcome yourself, and to submit, as your judgment, your will, your reason, your affections, so your tastes and likings, to the rule and usage of the Church.

8. "Ah, that faith should be necessary in such a matter, and that what is so natural and becoming under the circumstances, should have need of an explanation ! I declare, to me," he said, and he clasped his hands on his knees, and looked forward as if soliloquizing, "to me nothing is so consoling, so piercing, so thrilling, so overcoming, as the Mass, said as it is among us. I could attend masses forever, and not be tired. It is not a mere form of words—it is a great action, the greatest action that can be on earth. It is not the invocation merely, but, if I dare use the word, the evocation of the Eternal. He becomes present on the altar in flesh and blood, before whom angels bow and devils tremble. This is that awful event which is the end, and is the interpretation, of every part of the solemnity.

9. "Words are necessary but as means, not as ends ; they are not mere addresses to the throne of grace, they are instruments of what is far higher—of consecration, of sacrifice. They hurry on as if impatient to fulfil their mission. Quickly they go, the whole is quick ; for they are all parts of one integral action. Quickly they go ; for they are awful words of sacrifice, they are a work too great to delay upon ; as when it was said in the beginning, 'What thou doest, do quickly.'

Quickly they pass ; for the Lord Jesus goes with them, as He passed along the lake in the days of His flesh, quickly calling first one and then another.

10. "Quickly they pass ; because as the lightning which shineth from one part of the heaven unto the other, so is the coming of the Son of Man. Quickly they pass ; for they are as the words of Moses, when the Lord came down in a cloud, calling on the Name of the Lord as He passed by, 'The Lord, the Lord God, merciful and gracious, long suffering, and abundant in goodness and truth.' And as Moses on the mountain, so we, too, 'make haste and bow our heads to the earth, and adore.' So we, all around, each in his place, look out for the great Advent, 'waiting for the moving of the water.'

11. "Each in his place, with his own heart, with his own wants, with his own thoughts, with his own intentions, with his own prayers, separate but concordant, watching what is going on, watching its progress, uniting in its consummation ; not painfully and hopelessly following a hard form of prayer from beginning to end, but like a concert of musical instruments, each different, but concurring in a sweet harmony, we take our part with God's priest, supporting him, yet guided by him.

12. "There are little children there, and old men, and simple laborers, and students in seminaries, priests preparing for mass, priests making their thanksgiving ; there are innocent maidens, and there are penitents ; but out of these many minds rises one eucharistic hymn, and the great Action is the measure and the scope of it. And oh, my dear Bateman," he added, turning to him, "you ask me whether this is not a formal, unreasonable service ? It is wonderful !" he cried, rising up, "quite wonderful. When will these dear good people be enlightened ? O Wisdom, strongly and sweetly disposing all things ! O Adonai ! O Key of David, and Expectation of nations—come and save us, O Lord our God !"

13. Now, at least, there was no mistaking Willis. Bateman started, and was almost frightened at a burst of enthusiasm which he had been far from expecting. "Why, Willis,"

he said, "it is not true, then, after all, what we heard, that you were somewhat dubious, shaky, in your adherence to Romanism? I'm sure I beg your pardon; I would not for the world have annoyed you, had I known the truth." Willis's face still glowed, and he looked as youthful and radiant as he had been two years before.

14. There was nothing ungentle in his impetuosity; a smile, almost a laugh, was on his face, as if he was half ashamed of his own warmth; but this took nothing from its evident sincerity. He seized Bateman's two hands, before the latter knew where he was, lifted him up out of his seat, and raising his own mouth close to his ear, said in a low voice, "I would to God, that not only thou, but also all who hear me this day, were both in little and in much such as I am, except these chains." Then, reminding him it had grown late, and bidding him good-night, he left the room with Charles.

15. Bateman remained awhile with his back to the fire after the door had closed; presently he began to give expression to his thoughts. "Well," he said, "he's a brick, a regular brick; he has almost affected me myself. What a way those fellows have with them; I declare his touch has made my heart beat; how catching enthusiasm is! Any one but I might really have been unsettled. He is a real good fellow; what a pity we have not got him! he's just the sort of a man we want. He'd make a splendid Anglican; he'd convert half the dissenters in the country. Well, we shall have them in time; we must not be impatient. But the idea of his talking of converting me! 'in little and in much,' as he worded it! By the by, what did he mean by 'except these chains?'"

16. He sat ruminating on the difficulty; at first he was inclined to think that, after all, he might have some misgivings about his position; then he thought that perhaps he had a hair shirt or a catenella on him; and lastly, he came to the conclusion that he had just meant nothing at all, and did but finish the quotation he had begun. After passing some little time in this state, he looked towards the tea-tray; poured himself out another cup of tea; ate a bit of toast; took the coals off the fire ; blew out one of the candles, and taking up the other, left the parlor, and wound like an omnibus up the steep twisting staircase to his bedroom.

53. THE LAST HOURS OF LOUIS XVI.

ALISON.

SIR ARCHIBALD ALISON—son of the well-known author of the “Essay in Taste,” was born in Scotland, in 1792. His great work is “The History of Europe, from the commencement of the French Revolution, to the restoration of the Bourbons.” His style is rich and flowing, and he writes like a man who has no wish to be unfair ; but his point of view is always that of an Englishman and a tory. His History has been written too rapidly, and often betrays marks of haste, which destroys its value as an authority.

1. His last interview with his family presented the most heart-rending scene. At half-past eight, the door of his apartment opened, and the Queen appeared, leading by the hand the Princess Royal, and the Princess Elizabeth ; they all rushed into the arms of the King. A profound silence ensued for some minutes, broken only by the sobs of the afflicted family.

2. The King took a seat, the Queen on his left, the Princess Royal on his right, Madame Elizabeth in front, and the young Dauphin between his knees. This terrible scene lasted nearly two hours, the tears and lamentations of the royal family, frequently interrupting the words of the King, sufficiently evinced that he himself was communicating with the intelligence of his condemnation. At length, at a quarter-past nine, Louis arose ; the Royal parents gave, each of them, their blessing to the Dauphin, while the Princess still held the King embraced around the waist. As he approached the door, he uttered the most piercing shrieks. “I assure you,” said the Queen, “I will see you again in the morning at eight o’clock.” “Why not at seven?” they all exclaimed. “Well, then, at seven,” answered the King. “Adieu, adieu !”

3. These words were pronounced with so mournful an accent, that the lamentations of the family were redoubled, and the Princess Royal fell fainting at his feet. At length, wishing to put an end to so trying a scene, the King embraced them all in the tenderest manner, and tore himself from their arms.

4. The remainder of the evening he spent with his confessor, the Abbé Edgeworth, who, with heroic devotion, discharged the perilous duty of assisting his monarch in his last moments. At twelve he went to bed, and slept peacefully till five. He then gave his last instruction to Cléry, and put into his hands the little property that still remained in his hands, a ring, a seal, and a lock of hair. "Give this ring," said he, "to the Queen, and tell her with how much regret I leave her ; give her also the locket containing the hair of my children ; give this seal to the Dauphin, and tell them all what I suffer at dying without receiving their last embrace, but I wish to spare them the pain of so cruel a separation." He then received the Holy Sacrament, from the hands of his confessor, from a small altar erected in his chamber, and heard the last service of the dying, at the time when the rolling of the drums, and the agitation of the streets, announced the preparation for his execution.

5. At nine o'clock, Santerre presented himself in the Temple. "You come to seek me," said the King. "Allow me a minute." He went into his closet, and immediately returned with his Testament in his hand. "I pray you," said he, "give this packet to the Queen, my wife." "That is no concern of mine," replied the representative of the municipality. "I am here only to conduct you to the scaffold." The King then asked another to take charge of the document, and said to Santerre, "Let us be off." In passing through the court of the Temple, Louis cast a last look at the tower which contained all that was most dear to him on earth, and immediately summoning all his courage, seated himself calmly in the carriage beside his confessor, with two gendarmes on the opposite side. During the passage to the place of execution which occupied two hours, he never failed reciting the psalms which were pointed out to him by the good priest. Even the soldiers were astonished at his composure.

6. The streets were filled with an immense crowd, who beheld in silent dismay the mournful procession. A large body of troops surrounded the carriage. A double file of National Guards, and a formidable array of cannon, rendered hopeless any attempts at rescue. When the procession arrived at the place of execution, between the gardens of the Tuileries and the Champs Elysées, he descended from the carriage, and undressed himself without the aid of the executioners, but testified a momentary look of indignation, when they began to bind his hands. M. Edgeworth exclaimed with almost inspired felicity, "Submit to this outrage as the last resemblance to the Saviour, who is about to recompense your sufferings."

7. At these words, he resigned himself, and walked to the foot of the scaffold. Here he received the sublime benediction of his confessor, "Son of St. Louis, ascend to heaven!" He no sooner mounted, than advancing with a firm step to the front of the scaffold, with one look he imposed silence on twenty drummers, placed there to prevent him from being heard, and said with a loud voice: "I die innocent of all crimes laid to my charge. I pardon the authors of my death, and pray God that my blood may not fall upon France. And you, my people—" At these words, Santerre ordered the drums to beat; the executioners seized the King, and the descending axe terminated his existence. One of the assistants seized the head, and waved it in the air; the blood fell on the heroic confessor, who was on his knees by the lifeless body of his sovereign.

54. GOD'S SHARE.

McLEOD.

DONALD McLEOD is a convert to the Catholic faith. He has written a "Life of Mary, Queen of Scots," a "Life of Sir Walter Scott," both admirable specimens of biography. He has contributed several other works to the stock of American literature.

1. At the distance of some leagues from Fribourg, in the ancient county of Gruyère, lived, in the good old time, the excellent Count Peter III.; and when his race was run, he departed this life in a good Christian manner, leaving his memory and his property to his widow Wilhelmette.

2. The lady Wilhelmette had, in her province, a certain mountain, fruitful in snows and torrents, very grand to look at, but very unproductive. To this she joined some acres of good pasture-land, and gave it all to the Carthusians, asking them to pray for her, for her young son, and for good Count Peter the departed. To it she gave the name of Theil-Gottes, or Pars-Dieu—the share of God ; and got Bochart, monk of Val Saint, appointed the first Prior.

3. The monks went stoutly to work ; they cleared the forest, they terraced parts of the mountain-side, they brought soil thither with much labor, and sowed abundantly, and planted. And soon the voice of prayer made sweet the solitudes, and alms were ready for the wandering poor ; and the cross upon the tower and the mellow bell told the poor mountaineer that God was beside him.

4. Little by little, the people gathered round and built their humble houses there ; and the wilderness smiled, and there was another home of torrents won from rough Nature for a house of prayer. This was in A. D. 1308. In the year 1800, the ancient convent was burned down ; but the monks contrived to build it up again, without diminishing their alms. And so it stood until that melancholy Revolution, lifting up radicalism, drove the good fathers from their home, and left the empty halls of "God's Share" to tell to the wandering stranger the story of their benevolence.

55. OLD TIMES.

GRIFFIN.

GERALD GRIFFIN, a distinguished novelist and dramatist of the present century, was born near Limerick, in 1803. At an early age, when his talents were winning him fame and popularity in London, whither he had repaired, as he pleasantly expresses it in one of his letters, "with the modest desire of rivalling Scott and throwing Shakspeare into the shade," he suddenly withdrew from the path of literature, and became a devoted Brother of the Christian Schools, in which sphere of usefulness he died, in 1840, at the early age of 37. Some of Griffin's novels, and especially "The Collegians."

"Suil Dhu," "Tracy's Ambition," and "Tales of the Five Senses," are equal to any thing of the kind in our language. His great historical novel of "The Invasion" contains a mine of antiquarian research. His tragedy of "Gysuppus" holds one of the first places in the modern drama. As a poet, Griffin was also eminently successful.

1. OLD times ! old times ! the gay old times !

When I was young and free,
And heard the merry Easter chimes,
Under the sally tree ;
My Sunday palm beside me placed,
My cross upon my hand,
A heart at rest within my breast,
And sunshine on the land !
Old times ! old times !

2. It is not that my fortunes flee,
Nor that my cheek is pale,
I mourn whene'er I think of thee,
My darling native vale !
A wiser head I have, I know,
Than when I loiter'd there ;
But in my wisdom there is woe,
And in my knowledge care,
Old times ! old times !

3. I've lived to know my share of joy,
To feel my share of pain,
To learn that friendship's self can cloy,
To love, and love in vain—
To feel a pang and wear a smile,
To tire of other climes,
To like my own unhappy isle,
And sing the gay old times !
Old times ! old times !

4. And sure the land is nothing changed,
The birds are singing still ;
The flowers are springing where we ranged,
There's sunshine on the hill !

The sally waving o'er my head,
 Still sweetly shades my frame,
 But ah, those happy days are fled,
 And I am not the same !
 Old times ! old times !

5. Oh, come again, ye merry times !
 Sweet, sunny, fresh, and calm ;
 And let me hear those Easter chimes,
 And wear my Sunday palm.
 If I could cry away mine eyes,
 My tears would flow in vain ;
 If I could waste my heart in sighs,
 They'll never come again !
 Old times ! old times !
-

55. CHARACTER OF THE IRISH PEASANTRY.

BARRINGTON.

SIR JONAH BARRINGTON was born in Queen's county, Ireland, in 1767 ; died, 1834. He was a Judge of the Court of Admiralty, and a member of the Irish Parliament. He has left behind a valuable work on a most interesting period of Irish history, entitled "Rise and Fall of the Irish Nation." His Personal Sketches of the men of his times are inimitable in their way.

1. THE Irish peasantry, who necessarily compose the great body of the population, combine in their character many of those singular and repugnant qualities which peculiarly designate the people of different nations ; and this remarkable contrariety of characteristic traits pervades almost the whole current of their natural dispositions. Laborious, domestic, accustomed to want in the midst of plenty, they submit to hardships without repining, and bear the severest privations with stoic fortitude. The sharpest wit, and the shrewdest subtilty, which abound in the character of the Irish peasant generally lie concealed under the semblance of dullness, or the appearance of simplicity ; and his language, replete with the keenest humor, possesses an idiom of equivocation, which never fails successfully to evade a direct answer to an unwelcome question.

2. Inquisitive, artful, and penetrating, the Irish peasant learns mankind without extensive intercourse, and has an instinctive knowledge of the world, without mingling in its societies ; and never, in any other instance, did there exist a people who could display so much address and so much talent in the ordinary transactions of life as the Irish peasantry.

3. The Irish peasant has, at all periods, been peculiarly distinguished for unbounded but indiscriminate hospitality, which, though naturally devoted to the necessities of a friend, is never denied by him even to the distresses of an enemy.* To be in want or misery, is the best recommendation to his disinterested protection ; his food, his bed, his raiment, are equally the stranger's and his own ; and the deeper the distress, the more welcome is the sufferer to the peasant's cottage.

4. His attachment to his kindred are of the strongest nature. The social duties are intimately blended with the natural disposition of an Irish peasant : though covered with rags, oppressed with poverty, and perhaps with hunger, the finest specimens of generosity and heroism are to be found in his unequalled character.

5. An enthusiastic attachment to the place of their nativity is another striking trait of the Irish character, which neither time nor absence, prosperity nor adversity, can obliterate or diminish. Wherever an Irish peasant was born, there he wishes to die ; and, however successful in acquiring wealth or rank in distant places, he returns with fond affection to renew his intercourse with the friends and companions of his youth and his obscurity.

* It has been remarked that the English and Irish people form their judgment of strangers very differently:—an Englishman suspects a stranger to be a rogue, till he finds that he is an honest man ; the Irishman conceives every person to be an honest man till he finds him out to be a rogue ; and this accounts for the very striking difference in their conduct and hospitality to strangers.

6. An innate spirit of insubordination to the laws has been strongly charged upon the Irish peasantry: but a people to whom the punishment of crimes appears rather as a sacrifice to revenge than a measure of prevention, can never have the same deference to the law as those who are instructed in the principles of justice, and taught to recognize its equality. It has, however, been uniformly admitted by every impartial writer on the affairs of Ireland, that a spirit of strict justice has ever characterized the Irish peasant.*

7. Convince him by plain and impartial reasoning, that he is wrong; and he withdraws from the judgment-seat, if not with cheerfulness, at least with submission: but, to make him respect the laws, he must be satisfied that they are impartial; and, with that conviction on his mind, the Irish peasant is as perfectly tractable as the native of any other country in the world.

8. An attachment to, and a respect for females, is another characteristic of the Irish peasant. The wife partakes of all her husband's vicissitudes; she shares his labor and his miseries, with constancy and with affection. At all the sports and meetings of the Irish peasantry, the women are always of the company: they have a great influence; and, in his smoky cottage, the Irish peasant, surrounded by his family, seems to forget all his privations. The natural cheerfulness of his disposition banishes reflection; and he experiences a simple happiness, which even the highest ranks of society might justly envy.

* Sir John Davis, attorney-general of Ireland, who, in the reign of James the First, was employed by the king to establish the English laws throughout Ireland, and who made himself perfectly acquainted with the character of the inhabitants, admits that "there were no people under heaven, who loved equal and impartial justice better than the Irish."

57. ST. FRANCES OF ROME.

LADY FULLERTON.

LADY G. FULLERTON—Born in England, in 1812. She is a convert to the Catholic faith, and a writer of considerable merit. Her "Ellen Middleton" and "Grantly Manor" were written previous to her conversion. Her "Lady Bird," and her beautiful "Life of St. Frances of Rome," are the works of a later period, and bear the unmistakable stamp of faith-inspired genius.

1. THERE have been saints whose histories strike us as particularly beautiful, not only as possessing the beauty which always belongs to sanctity, whether exhibited in an aged servant of God, who for threescore years and more has borne the heat and burden of the day, or in the youth who has offered up the morning of his life to his Maker, and yielded it into His hands before twenty summers have passed over his head; whether in a warrior king like St. Louis, or a beggar like Benedict Labré, or a royal lady like St. Elizabeth, of Hungary; but also as uniting in the circumstances of their lives, in the places they inhabited, and the epochs when they appeared in the world, much that is in itself poetical and interesting, and calculated to attract the attention of the historian and the man of letters, as well as of the theologian and the devout.

2. In this class of saints may well be included Francesca Romana, the foundress of the religious order of the Oblates of Tor di Specchi. She was the model of young girls, the example of a devout matron, and finally a widow, according to the very pattern drawn by St. Paul. She was beautiful, courageous, and full of wisdom, nobly born, and delicately brought up. Rome was the place of her birth, and the scene of her labors; her home was in the centre of the great city, in the heart of the Trastevere; her life was full of trials and hair-breadth 'scapes, and strange reverses.

3. Her hidden life was marvellous in the extreme. Visions of terror and of beauty followed her all her days; favors such as were never granted to any other saint were vouchsafed to her; the world of spirits was continually thrown open to her sight; and yet, in her daily conduct, her character, and her ways, minute details of which have reached us, there is a simplicity as well as a deep humility, awful in one so highly gifted, touching in one so highly favored.

4. Troubled and wild were the times she lived in. Perhaps, if one had to point out a period in which a Catholic Christian would rather not have had his lot cast,—one in which there was most to try his faith and wound his feelings,—he would name the end of the fourteenth century, and the beginning of the fifteenth. War was raging all over Europe; Italy was torn by inward dissensions, by the rival factions of the Guelphs and the Ghibellines.

5. So savage was the spirit with which their conflicts were carried on, that barbarism seemed once more about to overspread that fair land; and the Church itself was afflicted not only by the outward persecutions which strengthen its vitality, though for a while they may appear to cripple its action, but by trials of a far deeper and more painful nature. Heresy had torn from her arms a great number of her children, and repeated schisms were dividing those who, in appearance and even in intention, remained faithful to the Holy See.

6. The successors of St. Peter had removed the seat of their residence to Avignon, and the Eternal City presented the aspect of one vast battle-field, on which daily and hourly conflicts were occurring. The Colonnas, the Orsinis, the Savellis, were every instant engaged in struggles which deluged the streets with blood, and cut off many of her citizens in the flower of their age. Strangers were also continually invading the heritage of the Church, and desecrated Rome with massacres and outrages scarcely less deplorable than those of the Huns and the Vandals.

7. In the capital of the Christian world, ruins of recent date lay side by side with the relics of past ages; the churches were sacked, burned, and destroyed; the solitary and indestructible basilicas stood almost alone, mournfully erect amidst these scenes of carnage and gloom; and the eyes of the people of Rome were wistfully directed towards that tutelary power which has ever been to them a pledge of prosperity and peace, and whose removal the signal of war and of misery.

58. SPRING.

LONGFELLOW.

MR. LONGFELLOW is an accomplished American poet and scholar; born in 1807. "Evangeline," "The Golden Legend," and "The Song of Hiawatha" are his longest and most finished poems. He is also popular as a prose writer.

1. It was a sweet carol, which the Rhodian children sang of old in Spring, bearing in their hands, from door to door, a swallow, as herald of the season :

"The swallow is come !
The swallow is come !
Oh, fair are the seasons, and light
Are the days that she brings
With her dusky wings,
And her bosom snowy white !"

2. A pretty carol, too, is that, which the Hungarian boys, on the islands of the Danube, sing to the returning stork in Spring :

"Stork ! stork ! poor stork !
Why is thy foot so bloody ?
A Turkish boy hath torn it :
Hungarian boy will heal it
With fiddle, fife, and drum."

But what child has a heart to sing in this capricious clime of ours, where Spring comes sailing in from the sea, with wet and heavy cloud-sails, and the misty pennon of the East wind nailed to the mast ?

3. Yes, even here, and in the stormy month of March even, there are bright warm mornings, when we open our windows to inhale the balmy air. The pigeons fly to and fro, and we hear the whirring sound of wings. Old flies crawl out of the cracks, to sun themselves, and think it is Summer. They die in their conceit ; and so do our hearts within us, when the cold sea-breath comes from the eastern sea, and again,

"The driving hail
Upon the window beats with icy flail."

4. The red-flowering maple is first in blossom : its beautiful purple flowers unfolding a fortnight before the leaves. The moosewood follows, with rose-colored buds and leaves ; and the dogwood, robed in the white of its own pure blossoms. Then comes the sudden rain-storm ; and the birds fly to and fro, and shriek. Where do they hide themselves in such storms? at what firesides dry their feathery cloaks? At the fireside of the great, hospitable sun ; to-morrow, not before : they must sit in wet garments until then.

5. In all climates, Spring is beautiful : in the South it is intoxicating, and sets a poet beside himself. The birds begin to sing : they utter a few rapturous notes, and then wait for an answer from the silent woods. Those green-coated musicians, the frogs, make holiday in the neighboring marshes. They, too, belong to the orchestra of nature, whose vast theatre is again opened, though the doors have been so long bolted with icicles, and the scenery hung with snow and frost like cobwebs.

6. This is the prelude which announces the opening of the scene. Already the grass shoots forth. The waters leap with thrilling pulse through the veins of the earth, the sap through the veins of the plants and trees, and the blood through the veins of man. What a thrill of delight in Spring-time ! what a joy in being and moving !

7. Men are at work in gardens, and in the air there is an odor of the fresh earth. The leaf buds begin to swell and blush ; the white blossoms of the cherry hang upon the boughs, like snow-flakes ; and ere long our next door neighbors will be completely hidden from us by the dense green foliage. The May flowers open their soft blue eyes. Children are let loose in the fields and gardens ; they hold buttercups under each others' chin, to see if they love butter ; and the little girls adorn themselves with chains and curls of dandelions, pull out the yellow leaves, and blow the down from the leafless stalk.

8. And at night so cloudless and so still ! Not a voice of living thing, not a whisper of leaf or waving bough, not a breath of wind, not a sound upon the earth nor in the air ! And overhead bends the blue sky, dewy and soft and radiant with innumerable stars, like the inverted bell of some blue flower, sprinkled with golden dust, and breathing fragrance ; or if the heavens are overcast, it is no wild storm of wind and rain, but clouds that melt and fall in showers. One does not wish to sleep, but lies awake to hear the pleasant sound of the dropping rain. It was thus the Spring began in Heidelberg.

59. MARTYRDOM OF FATHERS DE BREBEUF AND LALEMANT.

REV. J. B. A. FERLAND.

ABBÉ J. B. A. FERLAND, a contemporary French-Canadian writer of considerable eminence. His principal published works are, "Observations on a History of Canada, by the Abbé Brasseur;" "Notes on the Registers of Notre Dame de Quebec;" "A Voyage to Labrador;" "A Course of Canadian History;" "Journal of a Voyage to the Coast of Gaspé;" "Life of Monseigneur Plessis," &c., &c. Abbé Ferland was born in Montreal, on Christmas Day, 1805.

1. MEANWHILE those Indians who had entered Fort St. Ignatius would have the pleasure of torturing the two Jesuits. The latter were already in expectation of the torments reserved for the prisoners. Father Brebeuf had even, a little before, announced his death as near at hand.

2. They were, in the first place, beaten with sticks, then fastened to the stake, and tortured with fire and iron ; round the neck of each hung a string of red-hot axes, and round their waist is fastened a strip of bark soaked in burning pitch and resin, while, in derision of Holy Baptism, boiling water is poured on their head. Some recreant Hurons show themselves even more cruel than the fierce Iroquois, and add insult to cruelty. "You have told us," say they, "that the more people suffer in this world, the happier they are in the other ; well, we are your friends, since we procure you greater happiness in heaven. You ought to thank us for rendering you such good service."

3. In the height of his torments, Father Gabriel Lalemant raised his eyes to heaven, and clasping his hands, begged of God to assist him. Father de Brebeuf stood like a rock, insensible to fire and iron, without uttering a single cry, nor even so much as a sigh or groan. From time to time he lifted his voice to announce the truth to the heathens, and to encourage the Christians whom they were torturing around him. Exasperated by the holy freedom with which he spoke to them, his executioners cut off his nose, then his lips, and thrust a red-hot iron into his mouth. The Christian hero maintained the greatest composure, and his aspect was so firm and resolute that he seemed still to command his tormentors.

4. They then brought near to Father de Brebeuf his younger companion covered with fir-bark, which they prepared to set on fire. Throwing himself at the feet of the elder missionary, Father Lalemant commended himself to his prayers, and repeated the words of the Apostle St. Paul, "We are made a spectacle to the world, and to angels, and to men." Dragging Father Lalemant back to his stake, they set fire to the barks that covered him ; and his tormentors stood still to enjoy the pleasure of seeing him burn slowly, and to hear the groans which he could not repress.

5. Rendered furious by the smell of blood, the Iroquois now surpassed themselves in refinements of cruelty ; they tore out Father Lalemant's eyes, and replaced them by burning coals ; they cut pieces of flesh from the thighs of the two missionaries, which they baked on the coals, and devoured before their eyes.

6. Father de Brebeuf's torture lasted about three hours ; he died on the very day of his capture, the 16th of March, 1649, about four o'clock P. M. After his death the savages tore out his heart, which they shared among them ; they hoped that whosoever eat of it, might obtain a portion of their victim's courage. The tormentors then threw themselves upon Father Gabriel Lalemant, who was tortured without interruption till nine o'clock the following morning. Even then he was indebted for the termination of his misery to the compassion of an Iroquois, who, tired of seeing him languish a day and a night, put an end to his sufferings with a blow of his tomahawk.

7. Father Gabriel Lalemant, nephew of the two missionaries of that name, had been but six months in the Huron country. Born in Paris of a family distinguished in the profession of the law, he had taught the sciences for several years. Notwithstanding the feebleness of his frame, and the delicacy of his constitution, he had for years solicited the favor of being sent on the perilous Canadian mission. Although one of the last to reach the scene of combat, he had the happiness of being one of the first to secure the crown of martyrdom. He was but thirty-nine years old when he had the glory of dying, announcing the Gospel.

60. THE WILD LILY AND THE PASSION FLOWER.

ROUQUETTE.

REV. A. ROUQUETTE is a native of New Orleans. His French poems, under the title of Les Savanes, were received with much encouragement in France. He has written a beautiful and poetical treatise on the solitary life, entitled La Thébaïde en Amérique, and a volume of English poems, called "Wild Flowers." He is a perfect master of the melody of the English; and that he is a poet by nature appears in every line, and more strikingly in his prose than in his verse. Mr. Rouquette was ordained a priest in 1845.

1. SWEET flower of light,
The queen of solitude,
The image bright
Of grace-born maidenhood,

Thou risest tall
Midst struggling weeds that droop :—
Thy lieges all,
They humbly bow and stoop.

2. Dark color'd flower,
How solemn, awful, sad !—
I feel thy power,
O king, in purple clad !

With head reclined,
Thou art the emblem dear

Of woes divine ;
The flower I most revere !

3. The lily white,
The purple passion flower ,
Mount Thabor bright,
The gloomy Olive-bower.

Such is our life,—
Alternate joys and woes,
Short peace, long strife,
Few friends and many foes !

4. My friend, away
All wailings here below :
The royal way
To realms above is woe !

To suffer much
Has been the fate of Saints ;
Our fate is such :—
Away, away all plaints !

61. ILLUMINATION AT ST. PETER'S.

DR. ENGLAND.

Right Reverend JOHN ENGLAND, D.D., first Bishop of Charleston, S. C., was born in Cork, in 1786, died in Charleston in 1842. Dr. England was a man of great natural abilities, and profound and varied attainments. He was one of the greatest prelates the American Church has yet had. As a writer and an orator he had no superior, and few equals. He has enriched our literature with essays on almost every subject bearing upon the interests of Catholicity in this country. His works were collected and published, in five octavo volumes, by his successor, Dr. Reynolds.

1. In my last I gave a brief description of the procession and first vespers of the festival of St. Peter and Paul, on the 28th ult. Preparations had been made for illuminating the exterior of the church of St. Peter's as soon as night should fall. No description can convey to your readers an adequate idea of the spectacle which this presents. The dome is somewhat larger than the church of St. Mary of the Martyrs, which is the old Pantheon ; and this is not only surmounting the roof, but raised considerably above it. This Pantheon is much larger than the Circular Church,¹ in Meeting-street. Imagine this as only one of three domes, of which it is indeed far the largest, elevated considerably above the roof of a church, the façade of which is a grand pile of architecture ; this dome is half surrounded by columns, and the one by which the entablature over them is crowned, is closely ribbed to its summit ; over this is a ball, in which I was one of eight persons, standing erect, and we had room for at least four others, and this ball surmounted by a cross.

2. From the sides of the front two wings of splendid architecture project forward, upwards of eighty feet ; at their extremities are lofty columns, over which run the proper entablatures, crowned by pediments ; from these the immense colonnades recede almost semicircularly from each wing, sweeping with their hundreds of pillars round the immense piazza, capable of containing probably one hundred thousand human beings upon the area within their embrace.

3. In the centre of this is a rich Egyptian obelisk, resting upon the backs of four lions couchant upon the angles of a fine pedestal. Half way from this obelisk, at each side toward the colonnade, are the two magnificent fountains, probably the most superb in the world. Each appears to be a spacious marble vase, elevated upon a sufficiently strong, but gracefully delicate stem ; the summit of this vase is at the elevation of about twelve feet. From its centre rises to nearly the same height another still more slender and delicately-shaped stem, from whose summit is projected to a considerable height, a water-spout, which gracefully bending near its summit, and yielding to the direction of the wind, as it forms its curve and descent, is separated into a sort of sparkling spray of pearls and silver intermixed ; twelve other similar spouts shoot round this central liquid column, diverging from it on every side as they rise, and falling with a similar appearance at somewhat of a less elevation.

¹ The Circular Church, one of the principal buildings in Charleston, South Carolina.

4. They seem in the distance to be like rich plumes of some gigantic ostrich, gracefully waving in the breeze, while the descending shower is received in the capacious vase, from whose interior it is conducted to various fountains in the city. Hundreds of statues lift their various forms, appearing larger than life, over the frieze and cornice of the colonnade; while at the foot of the majestic flight of steps by which you ascend to the portico of the church, two ancient statues of St. Peter and St. Paul have for centuries rested upon their pedestals.

5. The façade of the church itself is surmounted by the colossal statues of the Twelve Apostles. The illumination consisted of two parts. The lamps for the first part were disposed closely, in colored paper, along the architectural lines of this mighty mass, along the ribs of the domes, around the ball, and on the cross.

6. To me, as I looked from the bridge of St. Angelo, the scene appeared like a vision of enchantment. It seemed as if a mighty pile of some rich, black, soft material, was reared in the likeness of a stupendous temple, and the decorations were broad lines of burning liquid gold. The ball and the cross were seen as if detached and resting in the air above its summit. It was indeed a becoming emblem of the triumph of a crucified Redeemer over this terrestrial ball. After I had passed the bridge, and as I approached the piazza, the front of the church, and the expanse of the colonnade, exhibited their lines of light. The specks which formed those lines glowed now more distinct and separate, and though their continuity was lost, their symmetry was perfect and magnificent.

7. The immense piazza was thronged with carriages, and persons on foot; while a division of the Papal dragoons, one of the finest and best disciplined bodies of cavalry in existence, moved in sections and single files through the multitude, calmly, but steadily and firmly, preserving order in a kind, polite, but determined manner. Scarcely a word is heard above a whisper; an accident is of so rare an occurrence as not to be calculated upon.

8. The cardinal secretary of state has a gallery in front of the church, to which foreign ambassadors, and a few other strangers of distinction are invited. I observed Captain Reed and his lady in this gallery, and many of our officers were promenading below. About an hour elapsed from the commencement, when the motion of a brighter light was observed towards the summit of the cupola, a large star seemed to shoot upwards to the cross, and, as if by a sudden flash from heaven, the whole edifice appeared to blaze in the glare of day.

9. A thousand lights, kindled by some inconceivably rapid communication, shed their beams upon every part of the building. Pillars and pilasters, with their vases, shafts, and capitals; mouldings, friezes, cornices, pediments, architraves, panels, doors, windows, niches, images, decorations, enrichments, domes—all, all with their faint lines of golden light, now softened to a milder lustre, revealed in brilliant relief to the enraptured eye.

62. ILLUMINATION AT ST. PETER'S—continued.

1. THE fountains were magnificently grand, and richly pure, and softened into a refreshing white. The multitude was silent. The horses were still. The glowing cross, elevated above the Vatican hill, beamed to the wide plains and distant mountains its augury of future glory, because of past humiliations. The crowd began to move; the low buzz of conversation, and then the horses' tramp; then followed the rattling of wheels.

2. And while tens of thousands remained yet longer, other thousands moved in various directions to their homes, or to distant elevated points, for the sake of a variety of views. I went to the magnificent Piazza del Popolo. It was literally a desert; but in its stillness, and the dereliction of its obelisk, its fountains, and its statues, by the very contrast to the scene that I had left, there arose a feeling of new sublimity. It was more deep, it was more solemn ; but it was less elevated, not so overpowering, nor so impressive as that to which it succeeded.

3. My object was to ascend from this place to the Monte Pincio, the commanding view from which would enable me to look over the city at the great object which attracted every eye. But the gates of the avenue at this side were closed, and I had to go to the Piazza di Spagna, and there to ascend by the immense and beautiful flight of steps to the Trinita del Monti. Standing here, in front of the convent of the Ladies of the Sacred Heart, the view of St. Peter's was indeed superb.

4. I proceeded up towards the public gardens lately formed on the summit of this ancient residence of so many of the remarkable men of five-and-twenty ages. At various intervals, I stopped and turned to view the altered appearance presented by the mass of light, as seen from those different positions. As I contemplated it, I reflected that it must soon be extinguished, like the transient glories of the philosophers, the heroes, the statesmen, the orators, who successively passed over the spot on which I stood.

5. An humble fisherman from Galilee, and an obscure tent-maker from Tarsus, were confined in the dungeons of this city. Seventeen hundred and sixty-eight years had passed away since one of them was crucified with his head downwards on the Vatican Hill, and the other was beheaded on the Ostian Way. They had been zealously faithful in discharging the duties of their apostleship.

6. In the eyes of men, their death was without honor ; but it was precious in the sight of God. Grateful and admiring millions from year to year proclaim their praises, while the Church exhibits their virtues as proofs of the Saviour's grace, as models for the imitation of her sons. Oh, let my soul die [the death of] the just, and let my last end be like to theirs ! Translated from this earth, they live in heaven. Tried for a time, and found faithful, they enjoy a glorious recompense !

7. The God that we serve is merciful in bestowing his grace, and is exceedingly bountiful in crowning his own gifts, by giving to us, through the merits of his Son, a recompense for those acts of virtue which he enables us to perform. I found myself again near the summit of the steps. I descended, and retired to my home, reflecting upon the wonders wrought by the Most High, through the instrumentality of those two great saints, the celebration of whose festival had thus commenced.

8. The ardent Peter and the active Paul. The name changed to signify the office to which he should be raised. The vicegerent of Heaven's King, bearing the mystic keys, with powers of legislation and of administration rested upon him; who of himself weak, but who, sustained by Christ, was strong. "Before the cock shall crow twice this night, thou shalt thrice deny me. Yes! Satan hath desired to have thee, that he might sift thee as wheat; but I have prayed for thee, that thy faith fail not. And thou once converted, confirm thy brethren."

9. The strongest power that hell can muster in its gates to make a furious assault upon that Church, the weighty administration of which shall rest upon you, and upon those that shall succeed you, shall from time to time be marshalled and sent forth for the destruction of that body which the Saviour organized, like a well-ordered kingdom upon earth, for the attainment of heaven; but the gates of hell shall not prevail against it. The dynasties of nations have perished, the palaces of the Cæsars are in ruins, their tombs have crumbled with the bodies they contained, but the successors of Peter continue.

10. Under the orders of Nero, the two apostles were consigned to what was imagined to be destruction. The vaults of the tyrant's golden palace are covered with vegetation. Standing on the unseemly ruins of the remnant of this monster's monument, by the side of the Flaminian Way, through the obscurity of the night the Christian peasant looks towards that blaze of light which, from the resting-place where the relics of the head of the Church and of the doctor of the Gentiles are found, breaks forth and irradiates the Eternal

City and its monumental environs. If Peter is elevated in station, Paul is not less glorious in merit.

11. He, too, looked back with sorrow on that day when he held the clothes of those who slew Stephen. But how nobly did he redeem his error! A vessel of election to bear the good odor of Christ into the palaces of kings! a torrent of eloquence flowing into the barren fields of a vain philosophy, to fertilize and adorn! A rich exhibition of virtue, winning by its beauty, attracting by its symmetry, and exciting to activity by emulation! A glowing meteor of benediction, dissipating the clouds, and warming the hearts of the beholders to charity on earth, that they might be fitted for glory in heaven!

63. THE SON'S RETURN.

GERALD GRIFFIN.

1. ON a sudden, she heard voices outside the window. Alive to the slightest circumstance that was unusual, she arose, all dark as it was, threw on her simple dress in haste and groped her way to the front door of the dwelling. She recognized the voice of a friendly neighbor, and opened the door, supposing that he might have some interesting intelligence to communicate. She judged correctly.

"Good news! good news! Mrs. Reardon; and I give you joy of them this morning. What will you give me for telling who is in that small boat at the shore?"

"That small boat!—what?—where?"

2. "Below there, ma'am, where I'm pointing my finger. Don't you see them coming up the crag towards you?"

"I cannot—I cannot, it is so dark," the widow replied, endeavoring to penetrate the gloom.

"Dark!—and the broad sun shining down upon them the whole day!"

"Day!—the sun! O my Almighty Father! save me."

"What's the matter? Don't you see them, ma'am?"

3. "See them?" the poor woman exclaimed, placing her hands on her eyes, and shrieking aloud in her agony: "Oh! I shall never see him more! I am dark and blind!"

The peasant started back and blessed himself. The next instant the poor widow was caught in the arms of her son.

"Where is she? My mother! O my darling mother! I can come back to you. Look! I have kept my word."

4. She strove, with a sudden effort of self-restraint, to keep her misfortune secret, and wept without speaking, upon the neck of her long-absent relative, who attributed her tears to an excess of happiness. But when he presented his young wife, and called her attention to the happy, laughing faces and healthful cheeks of their children, the wandering of her eyes and the confusion of her manner left it no longer possible to retain the secret.

5. "My good, kind boy," said she, laying her hand heavily on his arm, "you are returned to my old arms once more, and I am grateful for it—but we cannot expect to have all we wish for in this world. O my poor boy! I can never see you—I can never see your children! I am blind."

The young man uttered a horrid and piercing cry, while he pressed his clenched hands above his head, and stamped upon the earth in sudden anguish. "Blind! my mother! O Heaven! is this the end of all my toils and wishes? To come here, and find her dark forever! Is it for this that I have prayed and labored? Blind and dark! O my poor mother! Heaven! O mother, mother!"

6. "Hold, now, my boy—where are you? What way is that for a Christian to talk? Come near me, and let me touch your hands. Don't add to my sorrows, Richard, my child, by uttering a word against the will of Heaven. Where are you? Come near me. Let me hear you say that you are resigned to this and all other visitations of the great Lord of all light. Say this, my child, and your virtue will be dearer to me than my eyes? Ah, my good Richard! you may be sure the Almighty never strikes us except it is for our sins, or for our good. I thought too much of you, my child, and the Lord saw that my heart was straying to the world again, and has struck me for the happiness of both. Let me hear that you are satisfied. I can see your heart still, and that is dearer to me than your person. Let me see it as good and dutiful as I knew it before you left me."

7. The disappointed exile supported her in his arms. "Well, well, my poor mother," he said, "I am satisfied. Since you are the chief sufferer, and show no discontent, it would be too unreasonable that I should murmur. The will of Heaven be done! but it is a bitter—bitter stroke." Again he folded his dark parent to his bosom, and wept aloud; while his wife, retiring softly to a distance, hid her face in her cloak. Her children clung with fear and anxiety to her side, and gazed with affrighted faces upon the afflicted mother and son.

8. But they were not forgotten. After she had repeatedly embraced her recovered child, the good widow remembered her guests. She extended her arms towards that part of the room at which she heard the sobs and moanings of the younger mother. "Is that my daughter's voice?" she asked—"place her in my arms, Richard. Let me feel the mother of your children upon my bosom." The young woman flung herself into the embrace of the aged widow. "Young and fair, I am sure," the latter continued, passing her wasted fingers over the blooming cheek of the good American. "I can feel the roses upon this cheek, I am certain. But what are these? Tears? My good child, you should dry our tears instead of adding to them. Where are your children? Let me see—ah! my heart—let me feel them, I mean—let me take them in my arms. My little angels! Oh! if I could only open my eyes, for one moment, to look upon you all—but for one little instant—I would close them again for the rest of my life, and think myself happy. If it had happened only one day—one hour after your arrival—but the will of Heaven be done! perhaps even this moment, when we think ourselves most miserable, He is preparing for us some hidden blessing."

9. Once more the pious widow was correct in her conjecture. It is true, that day, which all hoped should be a day of rapture, was spent by the reunited family in tears and mourning. But Providence did not indeed intend that creature who had served him so faithfully should be visited with more than a temporary sorrow, for a slight and unaccustomed transgression.

10. The news of the widow's misfortune spread rapidly through the country, and excited universal sympathy—for few refuse their commiseration to a fellow-creature's sorrow, even of those who would accord a tardy and measured sympathy to his good fortune. Among those who heard with real pity the story of their distress, was a surgeon who resided in the neighborhood, and who felt all that enthusiastic devotion to his art, which its high importance to the welfare of mankind was calculated to excite in a generous mind. This gentleman took an early opportunity of visiting the old widow when she was alone in the cottage. The simplicity with which she told her story, and the entire resignation which she expressed, interested and touched him deeply.

64 THE SON'S RETURN—continued.

1. "It is not over with me yet, sir," she concluded, "for still, when the family are talking around me, I forget that I am blind; and when I hear my son say something pleasant, I learn to see the smile upon his lips; and when the darkness reminds me of my loss, it seems as if I lost my sight over again!"

2. The surgeon discovered, on examination, that the blindness was occasioned by a disease called cataract, which obscures, by an unhealthy secretion, the lucid brightness of the crystalline lens (described in a former chapter), and obstructs the entrance of the rays of light. The improvements which modern practitioners have made in this science render this disease, which was once held to be incurable, now comparatively easy of removal. The surgeon perceived at once, by the condition of the eyes, that, by the abstraction of the injured lens, he could restore sight to the afflicted widow.

3 Unwilling, however, to excite her hopes too suddenly or prematurely, he began by asking her whether, for a chance of recovering the use of her eyes, she would submit to a little pain?

The poor woman replied, "that if he thought he could once more enable her to behold her child and his children, she would be content to undergo any pain which would not endanger her existence."

4. "Then," replied her visitor, "I may inform you, and I have the strongest reasons to believe, that I can restore your sight, provided you agree to place yourself at my disposal for a few days. I will provide you with an apartment in my house, and your family shall know nothing of it until the cure is effected."

5. The widow consented; and on that very evening the operation was performed. The pain was slight, and was endured by the patient without a murmur. For a few days after, the surgeon insisted on her wearing a covering over her eyes, until the wounds which he had found it necessary to inflict had been perfectly healed.

6. One morning, after he had felt her pulse and made the necessary inquiries, he said, while he held the hand of the widow:—

"I think we may now venture with safety to remove the covering. Compose yourself now, my good old friend, and suppress all emotion. Prepare your heart for the reception of a great happiness."

7. The poor woman clasped her hands firmly together, and moved her lips as if in prayer. At the same moment the covering fell from her brow, and the light burst in a joyous flood upon her soul. She sat for an instant bewildered, and incapable of viewing any object with distinctness. The first upon which her eyes reposed was the figure of a young man bending his gaze with an intense and ecstatic fondness upon hers, and with his arms outstretched as if to anticipate the recognition. The face, though changed and sunned since she had known it, was still familiar to her. She started from her seat with a wild cry of joy, and cast herself upon the bosom of her son.

8. She embraced him repeatedly, then removed him to a distance, that she might have the opportunity of viewing him with greater distinctness, and again, with a burst of tears, flung herself upon his neck. Other voices, too, mingled with theirs. She beheld her daughter and their children waiting eagerly for her caress. She embraced them all, returning from each to each, and perusing their faces and persons as if she would never drink deep enough of the cup of rapture which her recovered sense afforded her. The beauty of the young mother—the fresh and rosy color of the children—the glossy brightness of their hair—their smiles—their movements of joy—all afforded subjects for delight and admiration, such as she might never have experienced, had she never considered them in the light of blessings lost for life. The surgeon, who thought that the consciousness of a stranger's presence might impose a restraint upon the feelings of the patient and her friends, retired into a distant corner, where he beheld, not without tears, the scene of happiness which he had been made instrumental in conferring.

9. "Richard," said the widow, as she laid her hand upon her son's shoulder, and looked into his eyes, "did I not judge aright when I said that even when we thought ourselves the most miserable, the Almighty might have been preparing for us some hidden blessing? Were we in the right to murmur?"

The young man withdrew his arms from his mother, clasped them before him, and bowed down his head in silence.

65. THE CHERWELL WATER-LILY.

FABER.

1. How often doth a wild flower bring Fancies and thoughts that seem to spring
From inmost depths of feeling!
Nay, often they have power to bless
With their uncultured loveliness,
And far into the aching breast

There goes a heavenly thought of rest
With their soft influence stealing.
How often, too, can ye unlock,
Dear wild flowers, with a gentle shock,
The wells of holy tears !
While somewhat of a Christian light
Breaks sweetly on the mourner's sight,
To calm unquiet fears !
Ah ! surely such strange power is given
To lowly flowers like dew from heaven ;
For lessons oft by them are brought,
Deeper than mortal sage hath taught,
Lessons of wisdom pure, that rise
From some clear fountains in the skies.

2. Fairest of Flora's lovely daughters
That bloom by stilly-running waters,
Fair lily ! thou a type must be
Of virgin love and purity !
Fragrant thou art as any flower
That decks a lady's garden-bower.
But he who would thy sweetness know,
Must stoop and bend his loving brow
To catch thy scent, so faint and rare,
Scarce breathed upon the Summer air.
And all thy motions, too, how free,
And yet how fraught with sympathy !
So pale thy tint, so meek thy gleam,
Shed on thy kindly father-stream !
Still, as he swayeth to and fro,
How true in all thy goings,
As if thy very soul did know
The secrets of his flowings.
3. And then that heart of living gold,
Which thou dost modestly infold,
And screen from man's too searching view,
Within thy robe of snowy hue !

To careless man thou seem'st to roam
 Abroad upon the river,
 In all thy movements chain'd to home,
 Fast-rooted there forever :
 Link'd by a holy, hidden tie,
 Too subtle for a mortal eye,
 Nor riveted by mortal art,
 Deep down within thy father's heart.

4. Emblem in truth thou art to me
 Of all a daughter ought to be !
 How shall I liken thee, sweet flower,
 That other men may feel thy power,
 May seek thee on some lovely night,
 And say how strong, how chaste the night,
 The tie of filial duty,
 How graceful, too, and angel-bright,
 The pride of lowly beauty !
 Thou sittest on the varying tide
 As if thy spirit did preside,
 With a becoming, queenly grace,
 As mistress of this lonely place ;
 A quiet magic hast thou now
 To smooth the river's ruffled brow,
 And calm his rippling water,
 And yet, so delicate and airy,
 Thou art to him a very fairy,
 A widow'd father's only daughter.

66. EDWARD THE CONFESSOR.

LINGARD.

JOHN LINGARD, D. D., was born, in England, in 1771; died in 1851. With the completion of the "History of England," in ten volumes, the literary fame of Dr. Lingard became established throughout Europe. Cardinal Wiseman speaks of this history, and its learned author, in the following terms:—"It is a Providence that in history we have had given to the nation a writer like Lingard, whose gigantic merit will be better appreciated in each successive generation, as it sees his work standing calm and erect amidst the shoals of petty pretenders to usurp his station. When Hume shall have fairly taken his place among the classical writers of our tongue, and Macaulay shall have been transferred to the shelves of romances and poets, and each thus have received his due meed of praise, then Lingard will be still more conspicuous as the only impartial historian of our country."

1. If we estimate the character of a sovereign by the test of popular affection, we must rank Edward among the best princes of his time. The goodness of his heart was adored by his subjects, who lamented his death with tears of undissembled grief, and bequeathed his memory as an object of veneration to their posterity. The blessings of his reign are the constant theme of our ancient writers: not, indeed, that he displayed any of those brilliant qualities which attract admiration, while they inflict misery.

2. He could not boast of the victories which he had achieved: but he exhibited the interesting spectacle of a king, negligent of his private interests, and wholly devoted to the welfare of his people; and, by his labors to restore the dominion of the laws, his vigilance to ward off foreign aggression, his constant, and ultimately successful, solicitude to appease the feuds of his nobles,—if he did not prevent the interruption, he secured, at least, a longer duration of public tranquillity, than had been enjoyed in England for half a century.

3. He was pious, kind, and compassionate; the father of the poor, and the protector of the weak; more willing to give than to receive, and better pleased to pardon than to punish. Under the preceding kings, force generally supplied the place of justice, and the people were impoverished by the rapacity of the sovereign. But Edward enforced the laws of his Saxon predecessors, and disdained the riches that were wrung from the labors of his subjects.

4. Temperate in his diet, unostentatious in his person, pursuing no pleasures but those which his hawks and hounds afforded, he was content with the patrimonial demesnes of the crown; and was able to assert, even after the abolition of that fruitful source of revenue, the Danegelt, that he possessed a greater portion of wealth than any of his predecessors had enjoyed. To him, the principle that the king can do no wrong, was literally applied by the gratitude of his people, who, if they occasionally complained of the measures of the government, attributed the blame not to the monarch himself, of whose benevolence they entertained no doubt, but to the ministers, who had abused his confidence, or deceived his credulity.

5. It was, however, a fortunate circumstance for the memory of Edward, that he occupied the interval between the Danish and Norman conquests. Writers were induced to view his character with more partiality, from the hatred with which they looked upon his successors and predecessors. They were foreigners; he was a native: they held the crown by conquest; he by descent: they ground to the dust the slaves whom they had made; he became known to his countrymen only by his benefits. Hence he appeared to shine with purer light amid the gloom with which he was surrounded; and whenever the people under the despotism of the Norman kings, had any opportunity of expressing their real wishes, they constantly called for "the laws and customs of the good King Edward."

67. CÆSAR'S OFFER OF AMNESTY TO CATO.

ADDISON.

JOSEPH ADDISON—One of the best of a class of writers known as "the wits of Queen Anne's time." His writings were chiefly essays published in the "Spectator," "Tatler," and "Guardian." He died 1719.

Decius. Cæsar sends health to Cato.

Cato.

Could he send it

To Cato's slaughter'd friends, it would be welcome.

Are not your orders to address the senate?

Decius. My business is with Cato: Cæsar sees
The straits to which you're driven; and as he knows
Cato's high worth, is anxious for his life.

Cato. My life is grafted on the fate of Rome:
Would he save Cato, bid him spare his country.
Tell your dictator this; and tell him, Cato
Disdains a life which he has power to offer.

Decius. Rome and her senators submit to Cæsar ;
Her generals and her consuls are no more,
Who check'd his conquests, and denied his triumphs.
Why will not Cato be this Cæsar's friend ?

Cato. Those very reasons thou hast urged, forbid it.

Decius. Cato, I've orders to expostulate,
And reason with you as from friend to friend.
Think on the storm that gathers o'er your head,
And threatens every hour to burst upon it ;
Still may you stand high in your country's honors,
Do but comply, and make your peace with Cæsar.
Rome will rejoice ; and casts its eyes on Cato,
As on the second of mankind.

Cato. No more !
I must not think of life on such conditions.

Decius. Cæsar is well acquainted with your virtues ;
And therefore sets this value on your life :
Let him but know the price of Cato's friendship,
And name your terms.

Cato. Bid him disband his legions,
Restore the commonwealth to liberty,
Submit his actions to the public censure,
And stand the judgment of a Roman senate.
Bid him do this,—and Cato is his friend.

Decius. Cato, the world talks loudly of your wisdom—

Cato. Nay, more,—though Cato's voice was ne'er employ'd

To clear the guilty, and to varnish crimes,
Myself will mount the rostrum in his favor,
And strive to gain his pardon from the people.

Decius. A style like this becomes a conqueror.

Cato. Decius, a style like this becomes a Roman.

Decius. What is a Roman, that is Cæsar's foe ?

Cato. Greater than Cæsar ; he's a friend to virtue.

Decius. Consider, Cato, you're in Utica ;
And at the head of your own little senate :
You don't now thunder in the capitol,
With all the mouths of Rome to second you.

Cato. Let him consider that, who drives us hither.
 'Tis Cæsar's sword hath made Rome's senate little,
 And thinn'd its ranks. Alas! thy dazzled eye
 Beholds this man in a false, glaring light,
 Which conquest and success have thrown upon him.
 Didst thou but view him right, thou'dst see him black
 With murder, treason, sacrilege, and crimes
 That strike my soul with horror but to name them.
 I know thou look'st on me, as on a wretch
 Beset with ills, and cover'd with misfortunes ;
 But, Decius, mark my words,—millions of worlds
 Should never buy me to be like that Cæsar.

Decius. Does Cato send this answer back to Cæsar,
 For all his generous cares, and proffer'd friendship?

Cato. His cares for me are insolent and vain.
 Presumptuous man! the gods take care of Cato.
 Would Cæsar show the greatness of his soul,
 Bid him employ his care for these my friends,
 And make good use of his ill-gotten power,
 By sheltering men much better than himself.

Decius. Your high, unconquer'd heart makes you forget
 That you're a man. You rush on your destruction—
 But I have done. When I relate hereafter
 The tale of this unhappy embassy,
 All Rome will be in tears.

68. THE DISCONTENTED MILLER.

GOLDSMITH.

OLIVER GOLDSMITH was born, 1731, at Pallasmore, county Longford, Ireland. As a poet, essayist, dramatist, and novelist, Goldsmith occupies a high position among the English classics. His novel of "The Vicar of Wakefield," his poems of "The Traveller" and "Deserted Village," and his drama, "She Stoops to Conquer," are each models in their kind. His historical writings are chiefly compilations, and not very reliable as authorities. Died April 4th, 1774.

1. WHANG, the miller, was naturally avaricious; nobody loved money better than he, or more respected those who had

it. When people would talk of a rich man in company, Whang would say, "I know him very well; he and I have been long acquainted; he and I are intimate." But, if ever a poor man was mentioned, he had not the least knowledge of the man; he might be very well for aught he knew; but he was not fond of making many acquaintances, and loved to choose his company.

2. Whang, however, with all his eagerness for riches, was poor. He had nothing but the profits of his mill to support him; but, though these were small, they were certain; while it stood and went he was sure of eating; and his frugality was such that he every day laid some money by, which he would at intervals count and contemplate with much satisfaction. Yet still his acquisitions were not equal to his desires; he only found himself above want, whereas he desired to be possessed of affluence.

3. One day, as he was indulging these wishes he was informed that a neighbor of his had found a pan of money under ground, having dreamed of it three nights running before. These tidings were daggers to the heart of poor Whang. "Here am I," says he, "toiling and moiling from morning till night for a few paltry farthings, while neighbor Thanks only goes quietly to bed and dreams himself into thousands before morning. Oh, that I could dream like him! With what pleasure would I dig round the pan! How slyly would I carry it home! not even my wife should see me: and then, oh! the pleasure of thrusting one's hand into a heap of gold up to the elbow!"

4. Such reflections only served to make the miller unhappy; he discontinued his former assiduity; he was quite disgusted with small gains, and his customers began to forsake him. Every day he repeated the wish, and every night laid himself down in order to dream. Fortune, that was for a long time unkind, at last, however, seemed to smile on his distresses, and indulged him with the wished-for vision. He dreamed that under a certain part of the foundation of his mill there was concealed a monstrous pan of gold and diamonds, buried deep in the ground, and covered with a large flat stone.

5. He concealed his good luck from every person, as is usual in money-dreams, in order to have the vision repeated the two succeeding nights, by which he should be certain of its truth. His wishes in this, also, were answered; he still dreamed of the same pan of money in the very same place. Now, therefore, it was past a doubt; so, getting up early the third morning, he repaired alone, with a mattock in his hand, to the mill, and began to undermine that part of the wall to which the vision directed him.

6. The first omen of success that he met was a broken ring; digging still deeper, he turned up a house-tile, quite new and entire. At last, after much digging, he came to a broad flat stone, but then so large that it was beyond a man's strength to remove it. "Here!" cried he, in raptures, to himself; "here it is; under this stone there is room for a very large pan of diamonds indeed. I must e'en go home to my wife, and tell her the whole affair, and get her to assist me in turning it up."

7. Away, therefore, he goes, and acquaints his wife with every circumstance of their good fortune. Her raptures on this occasion may easily be imagined. She flew round his neck and embraced him in an ecstasy of joy; but these transports, however, did not allay their eagerness to know the exact sum; returning, therefore, together to the same place where Whang had been digging, there they found—not, indeed, the expected treasure—but the mill, their only support, undermined and fallen.

69. LORD JAMES OF DOUGLAS.

A Y T O U N .

WM. EDMONDSTOUNE AYTOUN, was born at Fife, in Scotland in 1818. His writings have chiefly appeared in Blackwood's Magazine. From his national and historical ballads, published in that periodical, the volume of "The Lays of the Scottish Cavaliers," has been made up. We know of no ballads in our tongue, more spirit-stirring or ennobling in sentiment, than "The Execution of Montrose," "Burial March of Dundee," "Edinburgh after Flodden," "The Heart of the Bruce," &c.

1. "THE Moors have come from Africa
To spoil and waste and slay,
And King Alonzo of Castile
Must fight with them to-day."

"Now shame it were," cried good Lord James,
"Shall never be said of me
That I and mine have turn'd aside
From the Cross in jeopardie !

2. "Have down, have down, my merry men all—
Have down unto the plain ;
We'll let the Scottish lion loose
Within the fields of Spain !"

"Now welcome to me, noble lord,
Thou and thy stalwart power ;
Dear is the sight of a Christian knight,
Who comes in such an hour !

3. "Is it for bond or faith you come,
Or yet for golden fee ?
Or bring ye France's lilies here,
Or the flower of Burgundie !"

"God greet thee well, thou valiant king,
Thee and thy belted peers—
Sir James of Douglas am I call'd,
And these are Scottish spears.

4. "We do not fight for bond or plight,
Nor yet for golden fee ;
But for the sake of our blessed Lord,
Who died upon the tree.

"We bring our great king Robert's heart
Across the weltering wave,
To lay it in the holy soil
Hard by the Saviour's grave.

5. "True pilgrims we, by land or sea,
Where danger bars the way ;
And therefore are we here, Lord King,
To ride with thee this day !"
-

70. THE JESUITS.

MRS. SADLIER.

MARY A. SADLIER—born in Coote Hill, county Cavan, Ireland. Mrs. Sadlier emigrated to America in early life, but not before she had acquired that thorough knowledge of the Irish people which has enabled her to draw so many truthful pictures of the different classes among them. She has been a contributor to several of our leading Catholic journals in the United States and the Canadas. Her translations from the French are numerous, and some of them valuable. Her fame chiefly rests, however, on her original stories of Irish life at home and abroad. "New Lights," "Willy Burke," "The Blakes and Flanagans," "The Confessions of an Apostate," "Elinor Preston," &c., are well known to the Catholics of America. Her last and greatest work, "The Confederate Chieftains," is a work of much labor and research.

1. THE world never saw such an order as the Jesuits, never dreamed of such a mission as theirs, until it sprang into sudden existence from the divine genius of Ignatius Loyola, at the very moment when Christendom most needed such a powerful auxiliary. When the revolutionary doctrines of the Reformation were sweeping like a torrent over many of the countries of Europe, and men were asking themselves in fear and terror when and where was the devastating flood to be arrested in its course, the Almighty, ever watching over the interests of his Church, suddenly raised up a mighty dyke in presence of the great waters, and all at once they rolled back to their centre in the far north, and the fairest climes of old Europe were saved from their ravages.

2. This new bulwark of the Everlasting Church was no other than the Society of Jesus, one of the grandest conceptions that ever emanated from the brain of mortal man. So admirably fitted for the task before it, so well versed in all human science, yet so simple and so humble in their religious character, so full of the loftiest and most chivalrous devotion, and so utterly detached from earthly things, did the Jesuits appear before the world, that its dazzled vision could scarce comprehend what manner of men they were, those first disciples of Ignatius, the nucleus and foundation of that heroic order since so well known in every quarter of the habitable globe.

3. The martial character of its founder, who had fought with distinction in the Spanish wars, impressed itself on his order, and gave to it that lofty sentiment of heroism which distinguished it from all other monastic institutions then existing. It was to combat the pernicious innovations of the great heresy of the sixteenth century that the Jesuits were called into existence; and as instruments for that chosen work, they were from the first endowed with every quality that might insure success.

4. The arch-heretics of the day professed to unshackle the human intellect by leading it into all science, and far beyond the range prescribed by Romish tyranny. The Jesuits met them more than half way, with the open volume of science in their hand. The heretics professed to be learned; the Jesuits were more learned than they, for they mastered all knowledge, sacred and profane, which could tend to elevate mankind, and in every branch of science and literature they soared to heights where the enemies of religion might not follow.

5. They combated the foe with his own arms, and the world saw, with amazement, that the sons of Ignatius were the true enlighteners of the age, for the light which their genius threw on human learning came direct from the source of truth. The heretics were world-seeking and world-worshipping; the Jesuits trampled the world under their feet, and crucified the ancient Adam within them. Many of the earlier Jesuits were the sons of noble, and some even of princely, families; among others, St. Ignatius himself, St. Francis Xavier, St. Francis Borgia, St. Louis Gonzaga, and St. Stanislaus Kotska.

6. But they cheerfully resigned the world, and enlisted under the banner of Christ in the Society which bore his name. Armed only with the cross, their standard at once and their weapon, they went forth to fight and to conquer, strong in faith, humility, and charity; strong, too, in the gift of eloquence, and radiant with the light of science. The first Jesuits were men mighty in word and work, endowed even with the gift of miracles, like unto the first Apostles, and that for a similar purpose,—to bear testimony of the truth before the heretic and the unbeliever, and to establish the authority of God's Church on earth.

7. Animated with the spirit which descended on Ignatius during his lone night-watch in the chapel of Our Lady of Montserrat, the Jesuits were everywhere seen in the thickest of the contest, then raging all over Europe, between truth and religion on the one side, and error and heresy on the other. Wherever the Church needed their powerful succor, wherever human souls were in danger, there were the sons of Loyola seen, with lance in rest, to rescue and to save. The burning plains of Africa, the idolatrous countries of Asia, the wilds of the New World, and the swarming cities of old Europe, all were alike the scenes of the Jesuits' herculean labors.

8. They taught, they preached, they guided the councils of kings, they knelt with the penitent criminal in his cell, they consoled the poor man in his sorrows and privations, they traversed unknown regions in search of souls to save, they ate with the Indian in his wigwam, and slept on the cold earth, with only the sky for a covering, and often, very often, they suffered tortures and death at the hands of the ruthless Savage. East, west, north, and south, the earth has been saturated with their blood, and Christianity sprang up everywhere in the footprints washed with their blood.

71. EDUCATION.

DIGBY.

1. THE ancients say that the essential things in the education of the young are to teach them to worship the gods, to revere their parents, to honor their elders, to obey the laws, to submit to rulers, to love their friends, to be temperate in refraining from pleasures—objects not one of which the moderns would think of entering into a philosophic plan of education; since it is notorious that with them the direction of the energies and passions is always excluded from it.

2. The moderns have determined, practically at least, that the whole of education consists in acquiring knowledge, and that the only subject of deliberation is respecting the mode best calculated to further that end in the shortest time, and with the least possible expenditure. With them, the person who can speak or argue on the greatest number of subjects, with the air of knowing all about each of them, is the best educated.

3. The moderns generally applaud that system of public education which nourishes what they call a manly spirit, by which the boy is made bold and insolent, and constantly ready to fight or contend with any one that offers the smallest opposition to his will; which makes him resemble the son of Strepsiades returning from the school of the Sophists, of whom his father says, with joy, "In the first place, I mark the expression of your countenance: your face indicates at once that you are prepared to deny and to contradict. Yours is the Attic look."

4. Hence, many of their young men are like those who were disciples of the Sophists, of whom Socrates says, they were fair and of good natural dispositions—what the moderns would term of polished manners, but insolent through youth. The rules given to youth for conversation, in his treatise on the manner in which men should hear, approaches nearer to the mildness and delicacy of Christian charity than, perhaps, any other passage in the heathen writers. He inculcates what approaches to its modesty, its patience, in attending to others, and waiting for the voluntary self-corrections of those with whom they converse, and its slowness to contradict and give offence.

5. But all this falls very short, and indeed can yield not the slightest idea, of the effects of education upon the young in the ages of faith, when the Catholic religion formed its basis, and directed its whole system in all its objects, manners, and details. "The soul of the child," says St. Jerome, "is to be educated with the view of its becoming a temple of God. It should hear nothing but what pertains to the fear of God. Let there be letters of ivory," he continues, "with which it may play—and let its play be instruction. No learned man or noble virgin should disdain to take charge of its instruction."

6. These observations will have prepared us to feel the beauty of the following examples :—We read of St. Blier, that while a child he gave admirable signs of piety and grace. Nothing could be imagined more sweet, benign, gentle, and agreeable than his whole manner : he seemed like a little angel in human flesh, who used to pray devoutly, visit holy places, converse with saints, and obey the commandments of God with the utmost diligence.

7. Christine de Pisan says of Louis, duc d'Orléans, son of King Charles V., that the first words which were taught him were the Ave-Maria, and that it was a sweet thing to hear him say it, kneeling, with his little hands joined, before an image of our Lady; and that thus he early learned to serve God, which he continued to do all his life. And Dante, in the "Paradise," commemorating the youthful graces of St. Dominic, says of him,

" Many a time his nurse, on entering, found
That he had risen in silence, and was prostrate,
As who should say, ' My errand was for this.' "

8. The old writers love to dwell upon the description of this age. Thus the young Archduke Leopold of Austria is described as having the looks, as well as the innocence, of an angel; and it is said that the mere sight of him in Church used to inspire people with devotion. The young St. Francis Regis, while at college at Puy, was known to all the inhabitants of the town under the title of the Angel of the College. There might have been seen a young nobleman employed in collecting the poor little boys of the town, and explaining to them the Christian doctrine! What school of ancient philosophy ever conceived any thing like this?

72. EDUCATION—continued.

1. IN the first place then let it be remembered, that the mind of the young must ever be devoted either to an idea or to sense,—either to an object of faith (and youth is peculiarly qualified for possessing faith), or to that visible form of good which ministers to animal excitement. If the citadels of the souls of the young be left void of pure and noble images, they will be taken possession of by those that are contrary to them; if not guarded by the bright symbols of beauteous and eternal things, error and death, moral death, with all its process of intellectual degradation, will plant their pale flag there.

2. As with the intellectual direction, so it is with the manners and intercourse of youth; for these will ever be directed after one of two types—either by the spirit of sweetness and love, or that of insolence and malignity. All systems of education that are merely human, and under the guidance of rationalism, will never nourish and fortify, when they do not even recognize and extol the latter; for being formed on merely natural principles, all that belongs to man's unkindness will have free scope to be developed within their dominions; and, therefore, disobedience, dissipation, the will and ability to oppress weaker companions, will entitle the youth, who has sufficient tact, to know how far precisely these qualities may be exercised with the applause of animal minds, to the enviable character of possessing a manly spirit. He will discover, too, that his father has only one desire respecting him, like that of Jason in the tragedy, whose sole prayer for his sons is, that he may see them grow to manhood, well nourished and vigorous, that they may be a defence to him against his enemies.

3. In studies also, emulation will be carried to an excess, which renders the youthful mind obnoxious to all the worst attendants of ambition, so that under these modern systems, while education conduces to victory, their victory, as Socrates says, will often undo the work of education.

4. Plato had so sublime a sense of just education, that he acknowledges, that the good when young, will appear to be weak and simple, and that they will be easily deceived by the unjust—and he, too, would not allow the young to acquire that knowledge of the world, which was so carefully excluded from Catholic schools—but which is now thought so essential to children.

5. "He is only good who has a good soul ; which he cannot possess who has a personal acquaintance with evil."¹

6. Are we disposed to question this proposition ! Hear what Fuller acknowledges, "Almost twenty years since," says he, "I heard a profane jest, and still remember it."

7. The old poet, Claude de Morenne, acknowledges in one of his pieces, that he had read certain poems in his youth, which had done an injury to his imagination and his heart, which nothing could repair. This is the dreadful effect of renouncing the ancient discipline. Such is the stain which reading of this description impresses upon the mind, that the moral consequences seem among those which never may be cancelled from the book wherein the past is written.

73. ST. AGNES.

TENNYSON.

A. TENNYSON, the present poet laureate of England, is a popular and voluminous writer. He has a rich yet delicate taste in the use of language, and a descriptive power unparalleled by any other living poet.

1. DEEP on the convent-roof the snows
 Are sparkling to the moon;
 My breath to heaven like vapor goes;
 May my soul follow soon !
 The shadows of the convent-towers
 Slant down the snowy sward,
 Still creeping with the creeping hours
 That lead me to my Lord.
 Make Thou my spirit pure and clear
 As are the frosty skies,

¹ Plato de Repub., lib. iii.

Or this first snow-drop of the year
That in my bosom lies.

- 2 As these white robes are soil'd and dark,
To yonder shining ground;
As this pale taper's earthly spark,
To yonder argent round;
So shows my soul before the Lamb,
My spirit before Thee;
So in mine earthly house I am,
To that I hope to be.
Break up the heavens, O Lord ! and far,
Through all yon starlight keen,
Draw me, thy bride, a glittering star,
In raiment white and clean.

3. He lifts me to the golden doors;
The flashes come and go;
All heaven bursts her starry floors,
And strews her lights below,
And deepens on and up ! the gates
Roll back, and far within
For me the Heavenly Bridegroom waits,
To make me pure of sin.
The sabbaths of Eternity,
One sabbath deep and wide—
A light upon the shining sea—
The Bridegroom with his bride !
-

74. INFIDEL PHILOSOPHY AND LITERATURE.

ROBERTSON.

ROBERTSON—a distinguished writer and lecturer of the day. He is a native of Scotland, and at present holds the honorable position of Professor of History in the Irish University.

1. THE infidel philosophy of the last age was the child of the Reformation. Towards the close of the sixteenth century

sect of deists had sprung up in Protestant Switzerland. As early as the reign of James the First, Lord Herbert, of Cherbury, commenced that long series of English deists, consisting of Chubb, Collins, Shaftesbury, Toland, Bolingbroke, the friend of Voltaire. Bayle, who at the commencement of the eighteenth century, introduced infidelity into France, was Protestant; and so was Rousseau, the eloquent apostle of deism, and who did nothing more than develop the principles of Protestantism.

2. Voltaire and his fellow-conspirators against the Christian religion, borrowed most of their weapons from the arsenal of the English deists; and the philosopher of Ferney was, in his youth, the friend and guest of Bolingbroke. So Protestantism, which often, though falsely, taunts the Catholic Church with having given birth to unbelief, lies, itself, clearly open to that imputation. Let us take a glance at the character of the leaders of the great anti-Christian confederacy in France.

3. Bayle was a writer of great erudition, and extreme subtlety of reasoning. His "Dictionnaire Philosophique" is, even to the present day, often consulted. Montesquieu, one of the most manly intellects of the eighteenth century, unfortunately devoted to the wretched philosophy of the day the powers which God had given him for a nobler purpose. His strong sense, indeed, and extensive learning, guarded him against the wilder excesses of unbelief; but the absence of strong religious convictions left him without a compass and a chart on the wide ocean of political and ethical investigations.

4. Rousseau was a man of the most impassioned eloquence and vigorous reasoning; but a mind withal so sophistical, that, according to the just observation of La Harpe, even with itself deceives us in his writings. His firm belief in the existence of the Deity, and the immortality of the soul, as well as in the necessity of virtue for a future state of happiness, and some remarkable tributes to the Divinity, and the blessed influences of the Christian religion, give, at times, to the pages of Rousseau a warmth and a splendor we rarely find in the other infidel writers of the last century.

5. Inferior to Rousseau in eloquence and logical power, the sophist of Ferney possessed a more various and versatile talent. Essaying philosophy and history, and poetry—tragic, comic, and epic; the novel, the romance, the satire, the epigram, he directed all his powers to one infernal purpose—the spread of irreligion, and thought his labor lost as long as Christ retained one worshipper! Unlike the more impassioned sophist of Geneva, rarely do we meet in his writings with a generous sentiment or a tender emotion. But all that elevates and thrills humanity—the sanctities of religion, the nobleness of virtue, the purity of the domestic hearth, the expansiveness of friendship, the generosity of patriotism, the majesty of law, were polluted by his ribald jest and fiend-like mockery. “Like those insects that corrode the roots of the most precious plants, he strives,” says Count de Maistre, “to corrupt youth and women.”

6. And it is to be observed that, despite the great progress of religion in France within the last fifty years; though the aristocracy of French literature has long rejected the yoke of Voltaire, he still reigns in its lower walks, and the novel, and the satire, and the ballad, still feel his deadly influence. The only truth which this writer did not assail was; the existence of God; but every other dogma of religion became the butt of his ridicule.

7. A more advanced phase of infidelity was represented by D'Alembert, Diderot, and others; they openly advocated materialism and atheism. In the Encyclopedia they strove to array all arts and sciences against the Christian religion. It was, indeed, a tower of Babel, raised up by man's impiety against God. It was a tree of knowledge without a graft from the tree of life. In mathematics and physics only did D'Alembert attain to a great eminence. Diderot was a much inferior intellect, that strove to make up by the phrenetic violence of his declamation for the utter hollowness of his ideas. It was he who gave to Raynal that frothy rhetoric, and those turgid invectives against priests and kings, which the latter wove into his history of the European settlements in the East and West Indies.

75. INFIDEL PHILOSOPHY, ETC.—continued.

1. THE great Buffon, though he condescended to do homage to the miserable philosophy of his day, yet, by the nobleness of his sentiments, as well as by the majesty of his genius, often rose superior to the doctrine he professed.

Bernardine de St. Pierre was another great painter of nature. His better feelings at times led him to Christianity, but his excessive vanity drove him back to the opposite opinions. What shall I say of the remaining wretched herd of materialists and atheists,—a Baron d'Holbach, a Helvetius, La Mettrie, a Cabanis, and others? It has been well said by a great writer, that materialism is something below humanity. And while debasing man to a level with the brute, it takes from him all the nobler instincts of his own nature; it fails to give him in return those of the lower animals. So deep a perversion of man's moral and intellectual being we cannot conceive.

2. We cannot realize (and happily for us we cannot), that awful eclipse of the understanding which denies God. We have a mingled feeling of terror and of pity, when we contemplate those miserable souls, that, as the great Italian poet, Dante, says, have lost the supreme intelligential bliss: When that great idea of God is extinguished in the human mind, what remains to man?

Nature abhors a vacuum, said the old naturalists; with what horror then must we recoil from that void which atheism creates?—a void in the intelligence, a void in the conscience, a void in the affections, a void in society, a void in domestic life. The human mind is swung from its orbit; it wanders through trackless space; and the reign of chaos and old night returns.

3. What a lamentable abuse of all the noblest gifts of intellect, wit, and eloquence, imagination and reasoning! And for the accomplishment of what purpose? For the overthrow of religion, natural and revealed religion, the guide of existence, the great moral teacher, which solves all the problems of life, which tells our origin and destiny, our duties to our Creator and our fellow-creatures, the foundation of the family and of the State,—religion, the instructress of youth, and the prop of age ; the balm of wounded minds, and the moderator of human joys ; which controls the passions, yet imparts a zest to innocent pleasures ; which survives the illusions of youth, and the disappointments of manhood ; consoles us in life, and supports us in death.

4. Such were the blessings that perverted genius strove to snatch from mankind. Yet the time was at hand, when the proud Titans, who sought to storm Heaven, were to be driven back by the thunderbolts of Almighty wrath, and hurled down into the lowest depths of Tartarus.

But, even in regard to literature and science, the influence of this infidel party was most pernicious. How could they understand nature, who rested their eyes on its surface only, but never pierced to its inner depths ? How could they understand the philosophy of history, who denied the providence of God, and the free will of man ? How could they comprehend metaphysics, who disowned God, and knew nothing of man's origin, nor of his destiny ? And, was an abject materialism compatible with the aspirations of poetry ?

5. Classical philology, too, shared the fate of poetry and of history ; and in education was made to give place to mathematics and the natural sciences. Hence, from this period dates the decline of philological studies in France. The men of genius of whom infidelity could boast, like Montesquieu, Voltaire, Rousseau, Buffon, and D'Alembert, were men who had been trained up in a Christian country, had received a Christian education, and whose minds had been imbued with the doctrines and the ethics of Christianity, and had partially retained these sentiments in the midst of their unbelief. But let unbelief sink deep into a nation's mind—let it form its morals, and fashion its manners—and we shall soon see how barbarism of taste and coarseness of habits will be associated with moral depravity and mental debasement. Look at the goddess literature of the French Republic from 1790 to 1802 and at that of the Empire down to 1814. What contempt ble mediocrity of intellect ; what wretched corruption of taste !

6. But in the Catholic literature, which, after a long sleep, revives under Napoleon, and afterwards under the Bourbons, what fulness of life, what energy do we not discover ! What brilliancy of fancy and fervor of feeling in Chateaubriand ! What depth of thought and majesty of diction in the philosopher, De Bonald ! What profound intuitions—what force and plausibility of style in the great Count de Maistre ! What vigorous ratiocination—what burning eloquence, in De Lammeais before his fall ! What elevation of feeling and harmony of numbers in the lyric poet, Lamartine ! Except in the semi-antheistic school, represented by Victor Cousin and his friends, French infidelity in the present age, whether in literature or in philosophy, has no first-rate talent to display. Yet this school, Jouffroy died repenting his errors, and Victor Cousin himself has lately returned to the bosom of the Church.

76. THE DYING GIRL.

WILLIAMS.

RICHARD DALTON WILLIAMS is by birth an Irishman. At present, he is professor of Belles Lettres in the Catholic College, Mobile. "He writes with equal ability on all subjects, whether they be grave or gay, pathetic or humorous."—Hayes's Ballads of Ireland.

1. FROM a Munster vale they brought her,
 From the pure and balmy air,
 An Ormond peasant's daughter,
 With blue eyes and golden hair.
 They brought her to the city,
 And she faded slowly there ;
 Consumption has no pity
 For blue eyes and golden hair.
2. When I saw her first reclining,
 Her lips were moved in prayer,
 And the setting sun was shining
 On her loosen'd golden hair.

When our kindly glances met her,
Deadly brilliant was her eye ;
And she said that she was better,
While we knew that she must die.

3. She speaks of Munster valleys,
The patron, dance, and fair,
And her thin hand feebly dallies
With her scattered golden hair.
When silently we listen'd
To her breath, with quiet care,
Her eyes with wonder glisten'd,
And she ask'd us what was there.

4. The poor thing smiled to ask it,
And her pretty mouth laid bare,
Like gems within a casket,
A string of pearlets rare.
We said that we were trying
By the gushing of her blood,
And the time she took in sighing,
To know if she were good.

5. Well, she smiled and chatted gayly,
Though we saw, in mute despair,
The hectic brighter daily,
And the death-dew on her hair.
And oft, her wasted fingers
Beating time upon the bed,
O'er some old tune she lingers,
And she bows her golden head.

6. At length the harp is broken,
And the spirit in its strings,
As the last decree is spoken,
To its source, exulting, springs.
Descending swiftly from the skies,
Her guardian angel came,

He struck God's lightning from her eyes,
And bore him back the flame.

7. Before the sun had risen
Through the lark-loved morning air,
Her young soul left its prison,
Undeiled by sin or care.
I stood beside the couch in tears,
Where, pale and calm, she slept,
And though I've gazed on death for years,
I blush not that I wept.
I check'd with effort pity's sighs,
And left the matron there,
To close the curtains of her eyes,
And bind her golden hair.
-

77. MARIE ANTOINETTE.

BURKE.

EDMUND BURKE, born in Dublin, 1728; died, 1797. As a statesman and an orator, the world has, perhaps, never seen a greater than Edmund Burke. A great orator of our own day, says of him: "No one can doubt that enlightened men in all ages will hang over the works of Mr. Burke. He was a writer of the first class, and excelled in almost every kind of prose composition."—Lord Brougham.

"In the three principal questions which excited his interest, and called forth the most splendid displays of his eloquence—The contest with the American Colonies, the impeachment of Warren Hastings, and the French Revolution—we see displayed a philanthropy the most pure, illustrated by a genius the most resplendent. . . He was ever the bold and uncompromising champion of justice, mercy, and truth."—Allibone's "Dictionary of Authors."

As a writer, Burke has bequeathed to our times, some of the most perfect models of literary composition. His "Treatise on the Sublime and Beautiful," has never been exceeded in any language. He was, in every sense, a truly great and good man, and hence "the deep reverence with which his character is regarded in the present day." Indeed, the empire of Britain has no name more prized, than that of Edmund Burke, the son of a Dublin attorney.

1. HISTORY, who keeps a durable record of all our acts, and exercises her awful censure over the proceedings of all sorts of sovereigns, will not forget either those events or the era of this liberal refinement in the intercourse of mankind.

History will record, that on the morning of the 6th of October, 1789, the King and Queen of France, after a day of confusion, alarm, dismay, and slaughter, lay down, under the pledged security of public faith, to indulge nature in a few hours of respite, and troubled, melancholy repose.

2. From this sleep the queen was first startled by the voice of the sentinel at her door, who cried out to her, to save herself by flight—that this was the last proof of fidelity he could give—that they were upon him, and he was dead. Instantly he was cut down. A band of cruel ruffians and assassins, reeking with blood, rushed into the chamber of the queen, and pierced with a hundred strokes of bayonets and poniards the bed, from whence this persecuted woman had but just time to fly almost naked, and, through ways unknown to the murderers, had escaped to seek refuge at the feet of a king and husband, not secure of his own life for a moment.

3. This king, to say no more of him, and this queen, and their infant children (who once would have been the pride and hope of a great and generous people), were then forced to abandon the sanctuary of the most splendid palace in the world, which they left swimming in blood, polluted by massacre, and strewn with scattered limbs and mutilated carcasses. Thence they were conducted into the capital of their kingdom. Two had been selected from the unprovoked, unresisted, promiscuous slaughter, which was made of the gentlemen of birth and family, who composed the king's body-guard. These two gentlemen, with all the parade of an execution of justice, were cruelly and publicly dragged to the block, and beheaded in the great court of the palace.

4. Their heads were stuck upon spears, and led the procession; while the royal captives, who followed in the train, were slowly moved along, amidst the horrid yells, and thrilling screams, and frantic dances, and infamous contumelies, and all the unutterable abominations of the furies of hell, in the abused shapes of the vilest of women. After they had been made to taste, drop by drop, more than the bitterness of death, in the slow torture of a journey of twelve miles, protracted to six hours, they were, under a guard, composed of those very soldiers who had thus conducted them through this famous triumph, lodged in one of the old palaces of Paris, now converted into a Bastile for kings.

5. It is now sixteen or seventeen years since I saw the Queen of France, then the Dauphiness, at Versailles; and surely never lighted on this orb, which she hardly seemed to touch, a more delightful vision. I saw her just above the horizon, decorating and cheering the elevated sphere she just began to move in,—glittering like the morning star, full of life, and splendor, and joy. Oh! what a revolution! and what a heart I must have, to contemplate without emotion that elevation and that fall! Little did I dream, when she added titles of veneration, to those of enthusiastic, distant, respectful love, that she should ever be obliged to carry the sharp antidote against disgrace, concealed in that bosom; little did I dream that I should have lived to see such disasters fallen upon her in a nation of gallant men, in a nation of men of honor, and of cavaliers.

6. I thought ten thousand swords must have leaped from their scabbards, to avenge even a look that threatened her with insult. But the age of chivalry is gone. That of sophisters, economists, and calculators, has succeeded: and the glory of Europe is extinguished forever. Never, never more shall we behold that generous loyalty to rank and sex, that proud submission, that dignified obedience, that subordination of the heart, which kept alive, even in servitude itself, the spirit of an exalted freedom. The unbought grace of life, the cheap defence of nations, the nurse of manly sentiment and heroic enterprise, is gone! It is gone, that sensibility of principle, that chastity of honor, which felt a stain like a wound, which inspired courage, while it mitigated ferocity, which ennobled whatever it touched, and under which vice itself lost half its evil, by losing all its grossness.

78. THE OLD ÉMIGRÉ.

MISS MITFORD.

MARY RUSSELL MITFORD—born at Almford, in England, 1786; died, 1858. Miss Mitford's sketches of rural life are inimitable in their kind, and her style is a model for such compositions. Her series of sketches entitled "Our Village," and "Belford Régis," form very readable volumes.

1. THE first occupant of Mrs. Duval's pleasant apartments was a Catholic priest, an émigré, to whom they had a double recommendation,—in his hostess's knowledge of the French language and French cookery (she being, as he used to affirm, the only Englishwoman that ever made drinkable coffee); and in the old associations of the precincts ("piece of a cloister"), around which the venerable memorials of the ancient faith still lingered, even in decay. He might have said, with Antonio, in one of the finest scenes ever conceived by a poet's imagination,—that in which the echo answers from the murdered woman's grave :

2. "I do love these ancient ruins;
 We never tread upon them but we set
 Our foot upon some reverend history;
 And, questionless, here in this open court
 (Which now lies open to the injuries
 Of stormy weather) some do lie interr'd,
 Loved the Church so well, and gave so largely to't,
 They thought it should have canopied their bones,
 Till doomsday. But all things have their end:
 Churches and cities (which have diseases like to men)
 Must have like death that we have."

WEBSTER—Duchess of Malfi.

3. The Abbé Villaret had been a cadet of one of the oldest families in France, destined to the Church as the birthright of a younger son, but attached to his profession with a seriousness and earnestness not common among the gay noblesse of the old régime. This devotion, had, of course, been greatly increased by the persecution of the Church which distinguished the commencement of the Revolution. The good Abbé had been marked as one of the earliest victims, and had escaped, through the gratitude of an old servant, from the fate which swept off sisters and brothers, and almost every individual, except himself, of a large and flourishing family

4. Penniless and solitary, he made his way to England, and found an asylum in the town of Belford, at first assisted by the pittance allowed by our government to those unfortunate foreigners, and subsequently supported by his own exertions as assistant to the priest of the Catholic chapel in Belford, and as a teacher of the French language in the town and neighborhood ; and so complete had been the ravages of the Revolution in his own family, and so entirely had he established himself in the esteem of his English friends, that, when the short peace of Amiens restored so many of his brother émigrés to their native land, he refused to quit the country of his adoption, and remained the contented inhabitant of the Priory Cottage.

5. The contented and most beloved inhabitant, not only of that small cottage, but of the town to which it belonged, was the good Abbé. Everybody loved the kind and placid old man, whose resignation was so real and so cheerful, who had such a talent for making the best of things, whose moral alchemy could extract some good out of every evil, and who seemed only the more indulgent to the faults and follies of others because he had so little cause to require indulgence for his own.

6. From the castle to the cottage, from the nobleman whose children he taught, down to the farmer's wife who furnished him with eggs and butter, the venerable Abbé was a universal favorite. There was something in his very appearance—his small, neat person, a little bent, more by sorrow than age, his thin, white hair, his mild, intelligent countenance, with a sweet, placid smile, that spoke more of courtesy than of gayety, his gentle voice, and even the broken English, which reminded one that he was a sojourner in a strange land—that awakened a mingled emotion of pity and respect.

7. His dress, too, always neat, yet never seeming new, contributed to the air of decayed gentility that hung about him ; and the beautiful little dog who was his constant attendant, and the graceful boy who so frequently accompanied him, formed an interesting group on the high roads which he frequented ; for the good Abbé was so much in request as a teacher, and the amount of his earnings was so considerable, that he might have passed for well-to-do in the world, had not his charity to his poorer countrymen, and his liberality to Louis and to Mrs. Duval, been such as to keep him constantly poor.

79. THE SISTER OF CHARITY.

GERALD GRIFFIN.

1. SHE once was a lady of honor and wealth,
Bright glow'd on her features the roses of health ;
Her vesture was blended of silk and of gold,
And her motion shook perfume from every fold:
Joy revell'd around her—love shone at her side,
And gay was her smile, as the glance of a bride ;
And light was her step in the mirth-sounding hall,
When she heard of the daughters of Vincent de Paul.
2. She felt, in her spirit, the summons of grace,
That call'd her to live for the suffering race ;
And heedless of pleasure, of comfort, of home,
Rose quickly like Mary, and answer'd, " I come."
She put from her person the trappings of pride,
And pass'd from her home, with the joy of a bride,
Nor wept at the threshold, as onwards she moved—
For her heart was on fire in the cause it approved,
3. Lost ever to fashion—to vanity lost,
That beauty that once was the song and the toast—
No more in the ball-room that figure we meet,
But gliding at dusk to the wretch's retreat,
Forgot in the halls is that high-sounding name,
For the Sister of Charity blushes at fame ;
Forgot are the claims of her riches and birth,
For she barterers for heaven the glory of earth.
4. Those feet, that to music could gracefully move,
Now bear her alone on the mission of love ;

- Those hands that once dangled the perfume and gem.
Are tending the helpless, or lifted for them ;
That voice that once echo'd the song of the vain,
Now whispers relief to the bosom of pain ;
And the hair that was shining with diamond and pearl,
Is wet with the tears of the penitent girl.
5. Her down bed—a pallet; her trinkets—a bead;
Her lustre—one taper that serves her to read;
Her sculpture—the crucifix nail'd by her bed;
Her paintings—one print of the thorn-crowned head;
Her cushion—the pavement that wearies her knees ;
Her music—the psalm, or the sigh of disease ;
The delicate lady lives mortified there,
And the feast is forsaken for fasting and prayer.
6. Yet not to the service of heart and of mind,
Are the cares of that heaven-minded virgin confined.
Like Him whom she loves, to the mansions of grief
She hastes with the tidings of joy and relief.
She strengthens the weary—she comforts the weak,
And soft is her voice in the ear of the sick ;
Where want and affliction on mortals attend,
The Sister of Charity there is a friend.
7. Unshrinking where pestilence scatters his breath,
Like an angel she moves, 'mid the vapor of death ;
Where rings the loud musket, and flashes the sword,
Unfearing she walks, for she follows the Lord.
How sweetly she bends o'er each plague-tainted face,
With looks that are lighted with holiest grace ;
How kindly she dresses each suffering limb,
For she sees in the wounded the image of Him.
8. Behold her, ye worldly! behold her, ye vain !
Who shrink from the pathway of virtue and pain ;
Who yield up to pleasure your nights and your days,
Forgetful of service, forgetful of praise.

Ye lazy philosophers—self-seeking men,—
Ye fireside philanthropists, great at the pen,
How stands in the balance your eloquence weigh'd
With the life and the deeds of that high-born maid?

80. SIR THOMAS MORE TO HIS DAUGHTER.

SIR THOMAS MORE, a celebrated chancellor of England, who succeeded Cardinal Wolsey, as Lord High Chancellor, in 1530, and filled the office for three years with scrupulous integrity. For his conscientious scruples to take the oath of supremacy in favor of that brutal king, Henry VIII., he was beheaded in 1535, at the age of fifty-five. He was the author of the celebrated political romance of "Utopia." Dr. Johnson pronounced the works of More to be models of pure and elegant style. The following letter is addressed to his favorite child, Margaret Roper.

1. THOMAS MORE sendeth greeting to his dearest daughter, Margaret :

My Dearest Daughter—There was no reason why you should have deferred writing to me one day longer, though your letters were barren of any thing of interest, as you tell me. Even had it been so, your letters might have been pardoned by any man, much more, then, by a father, to whose eyes even the blemishes in his child's face will seem beautiful. But these letters of yours, Meg, were so finished both in style and manner, that not only was there nothing in them to fear your father's censure, but Momus himself, though not in his best humor, could have found nothing in them to smile at in the way of censure.

2. I greatly thank our dear friend, Mr. Nicols, for his kindness. He is a man well versed in astronomy ; and I congratulate you on your good fortune in learning from him in the space of one month, and with so small labor of your own, so many and such high wonders of that mighty and eternal Workman, which were found only after many ages, and by watching so many long and cold nights under the open sky. Thus, you have accomplished, in a short time, what took the labor of years of some of the most excellent wits the world has ever produced.

3. Another thing which you write me, pleaseth me exceedingly, that you have determined with yourself to study philosophy so diligently, that you will regain by your diligence what your negligence had lost you. I love you for this, my dear Meg, that, whereas I never found you a loiterer—your proficiency evidently showing how painfully you have proceeded therein—yet, such is your modesty, that you had rather still accuse yourself of negligence, than make any vain boast. Except you mean this, that you will hereafter be so diligent, that your former endeavors, though praiseworthy, may, as compared to your future diligence, be called negligence.

4. If this you mean—as I verily think you do—nothing can be more fortunate for me, nothing, my dearest daughter, more happy for you. I have earnestly wished that you might spend the rest of your days in studying the Holy Scriptures, and the science of medicine: these offer the means for fulfilling the end of our existence, which is, to endeavor to have a sound mind in a sound body. Of these studies you have already laid some foundation, nor will you ever want matter to build upon. In nothing are the first years of life so well bestowed as in humane learning and the liberal arts.

5. By these we obtain that our after age can better struggle with the difficulties of life; and if not acquired in youth, it is uncertain whether at any other time we shall have the advantage of so careful, so loving, and so learned a master. I could wish, my dear Meg, to talk long with you about these matters, but here they are bringing in the supper, interrupting me and calling me away. My supper will not be so sweet to me, as this my speech with you is; but then, we have others to mind as well as ourselves.

6. Farewell, my dearest daughter, and commend me kindly to your husband, my loving son; who, it rejoices me to hear, is studying the same things you do. You know I always counselled you to give place to your husband; but, in this respect, I give you full license to strive and be the master, more especially in the knowledge of the spheres. Farewell, again and again. Commend me to all your school-fellows, but to your master especially. From your father who loves you,

THOMAS MORE.

81. INFLUENCE OF CATHOLICITY ON CIVIL LIBERTY.

DR. SPALDING.

M. J. SPALDING, D. D., bishop of Louisville, born in Kentucky in the early part of the present century. This distinguished prelate and profound theologian, is also an accomplished scholar, and an eminent writer, who counts nothing foreign to his purpose, that affects the welfare of men. His reviews, essays, and lectures, are replete with the information most requisite in our age. His "Evidences of Catholicity," "Review of D'Aubigné's History of the Reformation," "Sketches of the early Catholic Missions in Kentucky," and his "Miscellanies," are among our standard works.

1. Of the old Catholic republics, two yet remain, standing monuments of the influence of Catholicity on free institutions. The one is imbosomed in the Pyrenees of Catholic Spain, and the other is perched on the Apennines of Catholic Italy. The very names of Andorra and San Marino are enough to refute the assertion, that Catholicity is opposed to republican governments. Both of these little republics owed their origin directly to the Catholic religion. That of Andorra was founded by a Catholic bishop, and that of San Marino, by a Catholic monk, whose name it bears. The bishops of Urgel have been, and are still, the protectors of the former; and the Roman Pontiffs of the latter.

2. Andorra has continued to exist, with few political vicissitudes, for more than a thousand years; while San Marino dates back her history more than fifteen hundred years, and is therefore not only the oldest republic in the world, but perhaps the oldest government in Europe. The former, to a territory of two hundred English square miles, has a population of fifteen thousand; while the latter, with half the population, has a territory of only twenty-one square miles. Both of them are governed by officers of their own choice; and the government of San Marino in particular, is conducted on the most radically democratic principles.

3. The legislative body consists of the Council of Sixty, one half of whom at least are, by law, to be chosen from the plebeian order; and of the Arrengo, or general assembly, summoned under extraordinary circumstances, in which all the families of the republic are to be represented. The executive is lodged in two capitanei regyenti, or governors, chosen every six months, and holding jurisdiction, one in the city of San Marino, and the other in the country;—so jealous are these old republicans of placing power in the hands of one man! The judiciary department is managed by a commissary, who is required by law to be a foreigner,—a native of some other part of Italy,—in order that, in the discharge of his office, he may be biassed by no undue prejudices, resulting from family connections.

4. When Addison visited the republic in 1700, he “scarcely met with any in the place who had not a tincture of learning.” He also saw the collection of the laws of the republic, published in Latin, in one volume folio, under the title: “Statuta illustrissimæ reipublicæ Sancti Marini.” When Napoleon, at the head of his victorious French troops, was in the neighborhood of San Marino, in 1797, he paused, and sent a congratulatory deputation to the republic, “which expressed the reverence felt by her young sister, France, for so ancient and free a commonwealth, and offered, besides an increase of territory, a present of four pieces of artillery.” The present was gratefully accepted, but the other tempting offer was wisely declined!

5. The good old Catholic times produced patriots and heroes, of whom the present age might well be proud. William Wallace, defeated at Boscanneth, fell a martyr to the liberty of his native Scotland in 1305. Robert Bruce achieved what Wallace had bled for not in vain,—the independence of his country. He won, in 1314, the decisive battle of Bannockburn, which resulted in the expulsion of the English invaders from Scotland. Are the Hungarians, and Poles, and Spaniards, and French, who fought for centuries the battles of European independence against the Saracens and Turks, to be set down as enemies of freedom? Are the brave knights of St. John, who so heroically devoted themselves for the liberty of Europe at Rhodes and at Malta, also to be ranked with the enemies of human rights?

6. We might bring the subject home to our own times and country, and show that the Catholics of the colony of Maryland, were the first to proclaim universal liberty, civil and religious, in North America ; that in the war for independence with Protestant England, Catholic France came generously and effectually to our assistance ; that Irish and American Catholics fought side by side with their Protestant fellow-citizens in that eventful war ; that the Maryland line which bled so freely at Camden with the Catholic Baron de Kalb, while Gates and his Protestant militia were consulting their safety by flight, was composed to a great extent of Catholic soldiers ; that there was no Catholic traitor during our revolution ; that the one who perilled most in signing the Declaration of Independence, and who was the last survivor of that noble band of patriots, was the illustrious Catholic, Charles Carroll of Carrollton ; that half the generals and officers of our revolution—Lafayette, Pulaski, Count de Grasse, Rochambeau, De Kalb, Kosciuszko, and many others were Catholics ; and that the first commodore appointed by Washington to form our infant navy, was the Irish Catholic—BARRY. These facts, which are but a few of those which might be adduced, prove conclusively that Catholicity is still, what she was in the middle ages, the steadfast friend of free institutions.

7. To conclude : Can it be that Catholicity, which saved Europe from barbarism and a foreign Mohammedan despotism,—which in every age has been the advocate of free principles, and the mother of heroes and of republics,—which originated Magna Charta and laid the foundation of liberty in every country in Europe,—and which in our own day and country has evinced a similar spirit,—is the enemy of free principles ? We must blot out the facts of history, before we can come to any such conclusion ! If history is at all to be relied on, we must conclude, that THE INFLUENCE OF THE CATHOLIC CHURCH HAS BEEN FAVORABLE TO CIVIL LIBERTY.

82. THE MINISTRY OF ANGELS.

SPENSER.

EDMUND SPENSER—one of the brightest of that galaxy of poets who shed lustre on the reign of Elizabeth. The poetry of Spenser belongs to the first order. There is a salutary purity and nobleness about it. He is a connecting link between Chaucer and Milton; resembling the former in his descriptive power, his tenderness, and his sense of beauty, though inferior to him in homely vigor and dramatic insight into character. His “Fairy Queen” is the chief representative in English poetry of the romance which once delighted hall and bower. Notwithstanding his polemical allegory of Duessa, a sorry tribute to the age, nothing is more striking than the Catholic tone that belongs to Spenser’s poetry. The religion and the chivalry of the Middle Ages were alike the inspirers of his song. He belongs to the order of poets who are rather the monument of a time gone by than an illustration of their own.

1. AND is there care in heaven? And is there love
In heavenly spirits to these creatures base,
That may compassion of their evils move?
There is :—else much more wretched were the case
Of men than beasts : but oh ! th’ exceeding grace
Of highest God, that loves his creatures so,
And all his works with mercy doth embrace,
That blessed angels he sends to and fro,
To serve to wicked man, to serve his wicked foe !
2. How oft do they their silver bowers leave
To come to succor us, that succor want !
How oft do they, with golden pinions cleave
The flitting skies, like flying pursuivant,
Against foul fiends to aid us militant !
They for us fight, they watch and duly ward,
And their bright squadrons round about us plant ;
And all for love, and nothing for reward :
Oh ! why should heavenly God to men have such regard !

SONNET.

3. SWEET is the rose, but grows upon a brere ;
Sweet is the juniper, but sharp his bough ;
Sweet is the eglantine, but pricketh near ;
Sweet is the firbloom, but his branches rough ;

Sweet is the cyprus, but his rind is tough ;
 Sweet is the nut, but bitter is his pill ;
 Sweet is the broom flower, but yet sour enough ;
 And sweet is moly, but his root is ill :
 So, every sweet with sour is temper'd still ;
 That maketh it be coveted the more :
 For easy things, that may be got at will,
 Most sorts of men do set but little store.
 Why, then, should I account of little pain
 That endless pleasure shall unto me gain ?

83. THE CHOICE.

MILES.

GEORGE H. MILES, native of Baltimore, professor now at Mt. St. Mary's College, his Alma Mater, one of our most gifted writers in poetry and prose. His two published tales of "The Governess," and "Loretto; or, The Choice," and still more his tragedy of "Mahomet," prove him possessed of a high order of talent.

1. "WHAT do you think of the world, Agnes? rather a nice place after all—eh? Oh, I have had my time in it!"

"And so have I," said Agnes.

"You ought to see more of it, my girl."

"No, thank you; I have seen quite enough."

"Why, you jade you, what have you seen in a month? It takes one years to see the world as it is, in all its majestically accumulating glory and versatile interest. Poh!" continued the Colonel, "what have you seen?"

2. "I have seen," returned Agnes, with provoking calmness, "that its standard of morality is not God's standard; that wealth and impudence are its virtues; poverty and modesty its vices; that money is its god, its grand governing principle, to which all else is subservient; that happiness is measured by the purse, and that a comfortable if not luxurious settlement in life is the grand goal, in the chase of which eternity is lost sight of."

"Poh!" ejaculated the Colonel.

3. "I have seen Catholics almost universally ashamed of the first principles of their faith, and artfully smoothing them over to attract their dissenting brethren. I have seen them dressing so indecently, even when priests are invited, that their pastors are put to the blush."

"That's the priest's fault," mumbled the Colonel.

4. "I have seen," continued Agnes, smiling at the interruption, "that your happy, merry men and women, are only so because they have a false conscience, which has ceased to accuse them; I have seen all who have virtue enough to feel, living in perpetual fear of the temptations by which they are surrounded. I have seen that society is but a hollow farce, in which there is neither love nor friendship. I have seen the idol of a thousand worshippers left without a single friend when touched by poverty."

5. The Colonel groaned and looked away from Lel.

"And I have seen," said Agnes, taking her uncle's hand, and modulating her voice to a whisper, "I have seen that, in spite of all this, the world is dazzlingly beautiful, winning, enchanting. And oh, my dear, good uncle, it is not God that makes it so! I have felt its insidious fascination. I tell you, uncle, that I have been wandering along the brink of a precipice; that I could no more live in the world than can the moth live in the candle; that my only salvation is in that Convent!"

6. The old man knocked the ashes carefully from his cigar, slowly brushed a tear from his eye, and put his arm around Lel's neck.

"Thank God, you are not a Catholic!" he exclaimed
"There are no Protestant convents to take you from me."

With tears streaming down her cheeks, Lel leaned her head on his shoulder. A horrible suspicion ran through the Colonel's mind. He raised her head in the clear moonlight, and mutely questioned her, with such a fearful, timid gaze, that her heart bled for him, as she said—

"Yes, uncle, I am a Catholic!"

7. The cigar fell from his hand—his cane rolled on the porch—his broad chest swelled as if his heart was bursting—had they both been dead at his feet, he could scarcely have shown more grief, than at this overthrow of all his plans, this defeat of his best diplomacy.

"CHECK-MATED!" he sobbed in uncontrolled agony; repulsed them sternly from his side, and then, spreading his arms, snatched them both to his bosom. "Check-mated! Check-mated!"

8. One word: the sermon just preached by Agnes against the world, has nothing new in it; Solomon put it all in a nutshell long ago; it will be found better expressed in every prayer-book. To the Colonel, it was perfectly puerile, the same old song which saints and misanthropists have been singing together from time immemorial. Only by constant meditation do we comprehend that life is but a preparation for death; and unless this great truth is realized, where is the folly in living as if time were the main thing and eternity a trifle?

9. The visible present, though brief, and bounded by the grave, is apt to be more important than the invisible future. Without strong faith, men must live as they do; and all who reprove them for neglecting their souls, in over devotion to their bodies, will seem only fools, or very good people, who have not weighed well the difficulty of what they propose. Every day we witness the same spectacle—a world, for whom God died upon the cross, devoting all their time, all their thoughts, to obtain material comfort and avoid sorrow: a prayer at night, an ejaculation in the morning—the rest of the day sacred to the body.

10. We see this every day; we do not wonder at it; it is all right, all in the order of Providence: the only mystery is, that some weak, pious souls are absurd enough to quit the world, and devote the greater part of their lives to religious exercises; this is the singular part of it. It would be an unnatural state of things, indeed, if all mankind were to make business secondary to religion, and spend as much time in praising God, as they do in making money.

11. Why, the best instructed, the most edifying Catholic parents, cannot help preferring an auspicious alliance with man for their daughters, to an eternal union with God in the solitary cloister; and how can we expect the worldly-minded Colonel, who has not seen a confessional for forty years, to consider the choice made by Agnes, as any thing else than a burning shame, a living death?

12. How many of us have realized, by prayer and meditation, that heaven is all and earth nothing? How many of us are truly sick of the vanity of life, much as we pretend to be, and do not sagely conclude that our neighbors and ourselves are all doing our duty, taking our share of enjoyment with sufficient gratitude, and bearing our just proportion of affliction with exemplary resignation?

13. There was a time when monasteries and chapels were as numerous as castles; when the Christian world seemed ambitious to live a Christian life; when self-denial and self-castigation were honored; when the consecration of a cathedral was of more moment than the opening of a railroad; when there was something nobler than science, and dearer than profit; when the security of government was in the humility of the people; when the security of the people was in the firmness and purity of the Church; when there was not, as now, a groundwork of ignorance, pride, and envy, which is either a withering master or a dangerous slave. Yes! there was a time when all this was, and when Agnes might not have been laughed at; but it was in the dark ages, reader, in those terrible nights before the sunlight of newspapers had illumined the earth.

84. THE CHOICE—continued.

1. MUST it be told that, within a month after her return from the city, Agnes entered the convent as a candidate; that three months later, her long hair was cut to suit the brown cap of the novice? Until her hair was cut, the Colonel had cherished a hope that she would repent her girlish haste; but when he saw the ruin caused by those envious shears, he could not help saying—"It is all over—all over!"

2. And ye who have clung to Agnes, in the hope that she would be induced to marry Melville, or incline to Mr. Almy, or that some romantic young gentleman would appear upon the carpet, invested with every virtue and every grace, between whom and our young novice, a sweet sympathy might be established, which should ultimately lead to better things than the cloister, and supply a chapter or two of delicious sentiment,—leave us, we beseech you,—for her CHOICE is made, though the vows are not yet taken.

3. Yes! she is lost to the world! that sweet, beautiful girl, who laughed so merrily with her load of premiums in her arms; the milk-white lamb among those green hills; the friend who had gone to change Lel, and who did change her, though she nearly perished in the effort; the kind protectress who had comforted little Clarence and the Wanderer; the keen-sighted woman who had penetrated the secret of Mr. Almy's face; who had conquered Melville, and reigned supreme in the ball-room, eclipsing all the practised belles of the season!

4. She was lost to the world! that sweet, beautiful girl, who was so well fitted to delight and adorn it; lost before the first bloom of youth had passed from her cheeks, before experience had dried the first bright waters of hope and trust that are born in our hearts; lost before there was any need to seek a refuge from the ills of life in that last resource, a convent! She is lost to the world, and what matters it what she has gained—what heaven has won!—so thought the Colonel.

5. Yet, what was his love for Agnes, compared to her mother's—the mother who remembered her baptism, her first cries, her first words, her first caresses; who had counted her first smiles, and treasured them in her heart; who remembered every incident of her youth, her first lisping prayers, her first songs, her first visit to mass, her first confession, her first communion, her confirmation: what was his bereavement to hers?

6. Agnes was her only child, her only companion in prayer, her jewel, her treasure, her all on earth; a thousand uncles could not have loved her as she did; their lives had been one and now they are called upon to live apart. Oh, not apart

Who shall say apart ! When they are repeating, day after day, and night after night, the same dear litanies, when they are appealing to the same saints, the same angels, the same Blessed Mother, the same Father, Son, and Holy Ghost ; when they are living together in God, who shall say they are living apart !

7. And thus thought Mrs. Cleveland, and she missed not her daughter's long, dark hair ; and if she shed floods of natural tears, it was not because her daughter was clad in the plain livery of heaven. And so thought Lel, and she was glad of the CHOICE, though she had now to sit and sew alone, though she had to walk alone, though she had to watch the sun rise and set, and play Beethoven, and listen to the birds and pluck wild flowers, and muse under the old oak-trees without Agnes at her side.

8. O God ! how beautiful must the soul be when entering heaven ! The plainest face, when lit with sanctity, is sublime, and prince and peasant bow down before it, or if they smite, it is in envy. No rouge shall ever tinge thy pale cheek, Sister Agnes ; no ring shall ever glitter on thy white hand ; thy hair shall never be twined into lockets ; thy foot shall never twinkle in the dance !

9. Thou art the child of God, Sister Agnes ! And who will dare to claim thee for the world, as thou kneelest there before the altar, or say that thou wert made for man ? Who would snatch thee thence, thou young companion of the angels, as if thou wert to be pitied and saved ? There is the likeness to God, which the children of earth have lost, and who would bid it vanish ?

85. LANDING OF THE URSULINES AND HOSPITAL NUNS
AT QUEBEC.

FROM THE HISTORY OF THE URSULINES OF QUEBEC.

1. It was on the first day of August, 1639, that the holy band, so long and anxiously desired, was seen to approach the Canadian shore ; and it was amid the sound of cannons, fifes, and drums that this little reinforcement took possession of the post which the Lord had assigned to them on the banks of the St. Lawrence.

2. Great joy there was throughout the whole colony, as we learn from Father Le Jeune, an eye-witness of what he describes in the "Relation" of that year : " And the brave Charles Huault de Montmagny," says he, " advanced to the water-side with all the military and all the inhabitants of Quebec, who, at that moment, rent the air with their shouts of joy."

3. It was, indeed, dear readers, an auspicious day when first appeared on our shores that young and noble widow,¹ with the religious who accompanied her ! They kissed respectfully the soil of that land, so long the object of their pious hopes and wishes ; and after acknowledging, in suitable terms, the numerous congratulations offered them on the successful issue of their voyage, they went, accompanied by the military and civil officers, with a crowd of citizens and also of savages, to the Chapel of Our Lady of Succor, built near Fort St. Louis, by Champlain, in 1633. There the Te Deum, intoned by Father Le Jeune, was caught up by the voices of the multitude, while the cannon from the fort proclaimed the joyous event far and wide.

4. After the Divine Sacrifice, the Governor, followed by the whole vast assemblage, conducted the religious to the Castle of St. Louis, where they received the compliments of all the most distinguished persons of that day in Canada. M^{de} Montmagny invited the religious to take their first repast on Canadian soil at his table.

¹ Madame de la Peltrie, foundress of the Ursulines of Canada.

5. They were afterwards conducted, with the same pomp, to the separate dwellings prepared for their reception: the Hospital Nuns to a house in the Upper Town, belonging to the Hundred Associates; and the Ursulines to a very small dwelling, a species of shop, then the property of the Sieur Juchereau des Châtelets, situate at the foot of the hill, not far from the place where the church of the Lower Town was subsequently built.

6. It is said that their first supper was sent them by the Governor; as for their bed, it was formed simply of fur branches, for the principal part of the baggage having been left at Tadoussac, and the other little effects not being yet brought ashore, the Ursulines found themselves without either bed, furniture, or provisions.

7. Well might their thoughts revert to the country they had left forever. Yet this, dear readers, was but the prelude to the life of sacrifice which our venerable mothers led in the bosom of this infant colony.

86. MELROSE ABBEY AS IT IS.

SCOTT.

SIR WALTER SCOTT is one of the men of whom Scotland is justly proud. It is the peculiar merit of Scott's writings to have revived something of that chivalrous sentiment without which society rusts in sordid pursuits, and to have turned back the eyes of a self-conceited age to the "olden time." With the frank nature and cordial humor which belonged to Chaucer and Shakspeare, Scott possessed also much of their dramatic power.

1. If thou wouldst view fair Melrose aright,
Go, visit it by the pale moonlight;
For the gay beams of lightsome day
Gild but to flout the ruins gray.
When the broken arches are black in night,
And each shafted oriel glimmers white;
When the cold light's uncertain shower
Streams on the ruin'd central tower;
When buttress and buttress alternately
Seem framed of ebon and ivory;
When silver edges the imagery,
And the scrolls that teach thee to live and die;

When distant Tweed is heard to rave,
 And the owlet to hoot o'er the dead man's grave,
 Then go ; but go alone the while—
 Then view St. David's ruin'd pile :
 And, home returning, soothly swear,—
 Was never scene so sad and fair !

2. Again on the knight look'd the churchman old,
 And again he sighèd heavily ;
 For he had himself been a warrior bold,
 And fought in Spain and Italy.
 And he thought on the days that were long since by,
 When his limbs were strong and his courage was high:
 Now, slow and faint, he led the way,
 Where, cloister'd round, the garden lay ;
 The pillar'd arches were over their head,
 And beneath their feet were the bones of the dead.

3. Spreading herbs and flowrets bright
 Glisten'd with the dew of night !
 Nor herb nor floweret glistened there
 But was carved in the cloister-arches as fair.
 The monk gazed long on the lovely moon,
 Then into the night he lookèd forth ;
 And red and bright the streamers light
 Were dancing in the glowing north.
 So had he seen, in fair Castile,
 The youth in glittering squadrons start ;
 Sudden the flying jennet wheel,
 And hurl the unexpected dart.
 He knew, by the streamers that shot so bright,
 That spirits were riding the northern light.

4. By a steel-clench'd postern-door
 They enter'd now the chancel tall ;
 The darken'd roof rose high aloof
 On pillars lofty, and light, and small ;

The keystone, that lock'd each ribbèd aisle,
Was a fleur-de-lys, or a quatre-feuille ;
The corbells were carved grotesque and grim ;
And the pillars, with cluster'd shafts so trim,
With base and with capitol flourish'd around,
Seem'd bundles of lances which garlands had bound.

5. Full many a scutcheon and banner riven
Shook to the cold night-wind of heaven
 Around the screenèd altar's pale !
And there the dying lamps did burn
Before thy low and lonely urn,
O gallant chief of Otterburne,
 And thine, dark knight of Liddesdale !
O fading honors of the dead !
O high ambition, lowly laid !
6. The moon on the east oriel shone
Through slender shafts of shapely stone
 By foliated tracery combined ;
Thou wouldst have thought some fairy's hand
'Twixt poplars straight the osier wand,
 In many a freakish knot, had twined ;
Then framed a spell, when the work was done,
And changed the willow wreaths to stone,
The silver light, so pale and faint,
Show'd many a prophet and many a saint,
 Whose image on the glass was dyed.
Full in the midst, his cross of red—
Triumphant Michael brandishèd,
 And trampled the apostate's pride.
The moonbeam kiss'd the holy pane,
And threw on the pavement a bloody stain.

87 THE FIRST SOLITARY OF THE THEBAIS.

CHATEAUBRIAND.

The name of CHATEAUBRIAND stands distinguished among the literary men of modern France, and his vivid imagination and poetical fervor would have made him conspicuous in any age. His masterpiece is the "Genius of Christianity," which contains more brilliant and varied eloquence than any work of the kind produced by the present century.

1. "To the east of this vale of palms arose a high mountain. I directed my course to this kind of Pharos, that seemed to call me to a haven of security, through the immovable floods and solid billows of an ocean of sand. I reached the foot of the mountain, and began to ascend the black and calcined rocks, which closed the horizon on every side. Night descended. Thinking I heard some sound near me, I halted, and plainly distinguished the footsteps of some wild beast, which was wandering in the dark, and broke through the dried shrubs that opposed his progress. I thought that I recognized the lion of the fountain.

2. "Suddenly he sent forth a tremendous roar. The echoes of these unknown mountains seemed to awaken for the first time, and returned the roar in savage murmurs. He had paused in front of a cavern whose entrance was closed with a stone. I beheld a light glimmering between the crevices of this rock, and my heart beat high with hope and with wonder. I approached and looked in, when, to my astonishment, I really beheld a light shining at the bottom of the cavern.

" 'Whoever thou art,' cried I, 'that feedest the savage beasts, have pity on a wretched wanderer.'

" Scarcely had I pronounced these words, when I heard the voice of an old man who was chanting one of the Scriptural canticles. I cried in a loud tone :

" 'Christian, receive your brother.'

3. " Scarcely had I uttered these words, when a man approached, broken with age ; his snowy beard seemed whitened with all the years of Jacob, and he was clothed in a garment formed of the leaves of the palm.

" 'Stranger,' said he, 'you are welcome You behold man who is on the point of being reduced to his kindred dust. The hour of my happy departure is arrived : yet still I have a few moments left to dedicate to hospitality. Enter, my brother, the grotto of Paul.'

"Overpowered with veneration, I followed this founder of Christianity in the deserts of the Thebais.

4. "A palm-tree, which grew in the recess of the grotto, entwined its spreading branches along the rock, and formed a species of vestibule. Near it flowed a spring remarkable for its transparency ; out of this fountain issued a small rivulet, that had scarcely escaped from its source before it buried itself in the bosom of the earth. Paul seated himself with me on the margin of the fountain, and the lion that had shown me the Arab's well, came and crouched himself at our feet.

5. "'Stranger,' said the anchorite, with a happy simplicity, 'how do the affairs of the world go on? Do they still build cities? Who is the master that reigns at present? For a hundred and thirteen years have I inhabited this grotto? and for a hundred years I have seen only two men—yourself, and Anthony, the inheritor of my desert; he came yesterday to visit me, and will return to-morrow to bury me.'

6. "As he said this, Paul went and brought some bread of the finest kind, from the cavity of the rock. He told me that Providence supplied him every day with a fresh quantity of this food. He invited me to break the heavenly gift with him. We drank the water of the spring in the hollow of our hands ; and after this frugal repast, the holy man inquired what events had conducted me to this inaccessible retreat. After listening to the deplorable history of my life :

7. "'Eudorus,' said he, 'your faults have been great ; but there is no stain which the tears of penitence cannot efface. It is not without some design that Providence has made you witness of the introduction of Christianity into every land. You will also find it here in this solitude, among the lions, beneath the fires of the tropic, as you have encountered it amidst the bears and the glaciers of the pole. Soldier of Jesus Christ, you are destined to fight and to conquer for the faith. O God ! whose ways are incomprehensible, it is thou that hast conducted this young confessor to my grotto, that I might unveil futurity to his view ; that by perfecting him in the knowledge of his religion, I might complete in him by grace the work that nature has begun ! Eudorus, repose here for the rest of the day ; to-morrow, at sunrise, we will ascend the mountain to pray, and I will speak to you before I die.'

8. "After this, the holy man conversed with me for a long time on the beauty of religion, and on the blessings it should one day shed upon mankind. During this discourse the old man presented an extraordinary contrast ; simple as a child when left to nature alone, he seemed to have forgotten everything, or rather to know nothing, of the world, of its grandeurs, its miseries, and its pleasures ; but when God descended into his soul, Paul became an inspired genius, filled with experience of the present, and with visions of the future. Thus in his person two opposite characters seemed to unite : still it was doubtful which was the more admirable, Paul the ignorant, or Paul the prophet ; since to the simplicity of the former was granted the sublimity of the latter.

9. "After giving me many instructions full of a wisdom intermingled with sweetness, and a gravity tempered with cheerfulness, Paul invited me to offer with him a sacrifice of praise to the Eternal ; he arose, and placing himself under the palm-tree, thus chanted aloud :

" "Blessed be thou, the God of my fathers, who hast had regard to the lowliness of thy servant !

" "O solitude, thou spouse of my bosom, thou art about to lose him for whom thou didst possess unfading charms !

" "The votary of solitude ought to preserve his body in chastity, to have his lips undefiled, and his mind illuminated with divine light.

" "Holy sadness of penitence, come, pierce my soul like a needle of gold, and fill it with celestial sweetness !

" "Tears are the mother of virtue, and sorrow is the footstool to heaven.'

10. "The old man's prayer was scarcely finished, when I fell into a sweet and profound sleep. I reposed on the stony couch which Paul preferred to a bed of roses. The sun was on the point of setting when I again opened my eyes to the light. The hermit said to me :

“ ‘ Arise and pray ; take your refreshment, and let us go to the mountain.’ ”

“ I obeyed him, and we departed together. For more than six hours we ascended the craggy rocks ; and at daybreak we had reached the most elevated point of Mount Colzim.

11. “ An immense horizon stretched around us. To the east arose the summits of Horeb and Sinai ; the desert of Sûr, and the Red Sea, lay stretched in boundless expanse below ; to the south the mountains of the Thebais formed a mighty chain ; the northern prospect was bounded by the northern plains, over which Pharoah pursued the Hebrews ; while to the west, stretching far beyond the sands amidst which I had been lost, lay the fertile valley of Egypt.

12. “ The first rays of Aurora, streaming from the horizon of Arabia Felix, for some time tinged this immense picture with softened light. The zebra, the antelope, and the ostrich ran rapidly over the desert, while the camels of a caravan passed gently in a row, headed by a sagacious ass, which acted as their conductor. The bosom of the Red Sea was checkered with many a whitening sail, that wafted into its ports the silks and the perfumes of the East, or perhaps bore some intelligent voyager to the shores of India. At last the sun arose, and crowned with splendor this frontier of the eastern and western worlds ; he poured a blaze of light on the heights of Sinai—a feeble, yet brilliant image of the God that Moses contemplated on the summit of this sacred mount ! ”

88. THE FIRST SOLITARY—concluded.

1. “ MY hoary conductor now broke silence :

“ ‘ Confessor of the faith,’ said he ‘ cast your eyes around you. Behold this eastern clime, where all the religions, and all the revolutions of the earth, have had their origin ; behold this Egypt, whence your Greece received her elegant divinities, and India her monstrous and misshapen gods ; in these same regions Jesus Christ himself appeared, and the day shall come when a descendant of Ishmael shall re-establish error beneath the Arab's tent. The first system of morality that was committed to writing, was also the production of this fruitful soil.

2. "It is worthy of your attention, that the people of the East, as if in punishment for some great rebellion of their forefathers, have almost always been under the dominion of tyrants; thus, as a kind of miraculous counterpoise, morality and religion have sprung up in the same land that gave birth to slavery and misfortune. Lastly, these same deserts witnessed the march of the armies of Sesostris and Cambyses, of Alexander and Cæsar. Ye too, ye future ages, shall send hither armies equally numerous, and warriors not less celebrated! All the great and daring efforts of the human species have either had their origin here, or have come hither to exhaust their force. A supernatural energy has ever been preserved in these regions wherein the first man received life; something miraculous seems still attached to the cradle of creation and the source of light and knowledge.

3. "Without stopping to contemplate those scenes of human grandeur that have long been closed in endless night, or to consider those epochs so renowned in history, but which have passed away like the fleeting vapor, it is to the Christian, above all others, that the East is a land of wonders.

"You have seen Christianity, aided by morality, penetrate the civilized countries of Italy and Greece; you have seen it introduced by means of charity among the barbarous nations of Gaul and Germany; here, under the influence of an atmosphere that weakens the soul while rendering it obstinate, among a people grave by its political institutions, and trifling by its climate, charity and morality would be insufficient.

4. "The religion of Jesus Christ can only enter the temples of Isis and Ammon under the veil of penitence. To luxury and effeminacy it must offer examples of the most rigid privation; to the knavery of the priests, and the lying illusions of false divinities, it must oppose real miracles and the oracles of truth: scenes of extraordinary virtue alone can tear away the crowd from the enchantments of the theatre and the circus.

when men have been guilty of great crimes, great expiations are necessary, in order that the renown of the latter may efface the celebrity of the former.

5. “Such are the reasons for which those missionaries were established, of whom I am the first, and who will be perpetuated in these solitudes. Admire in this the conduct of our divine chief, who knows how to arrange his armies according to the places and the obstacles they have to encounter. Contemplate these two religions, about to struggle here hand to hand until one shall have humbled the other in the dust. The ancient worship of Osiris, whose origin is hidden in the night of time, proudly confident in its traditions, its mysteries, and its pomps, rests securely upon victory.

6. “The mighty dragon of Egypt lies basking in the midst of his waves, and exclaims : “The river is mine.” He believes that the crocodile shall always receive the incense of mortals, and that the ox, which is slaughtered at the crib, shall never cease to rank as the first of divinities. No, my son, an army shall be formed in these deserts, and shall march to conquest under the banners of truth. From the solitudes of Thebais and of Scetis shall it advance: it is composed of aged saints, who carry no other weapon than their staffs to besiege the ministers of error in their very temples.

7. “The latter occupy fertile plains, and revel amidst luxury and sensual gratifications ; the former inhabit the burning sands of the desert, and patiently endure all the rigors of life. Hell, that foresees the destruction of its power, attempts every means to insure its victory: the demons of voluptuousness, of riches, and of ambition, seek to corrupt these faithful soldiers of the cross ; but heaven comes to the succor of its children, and lavishes miracles in their favor. Who can recount the names of so many illustrious recluses—the Anthonies, the Serapions, the Macariuses, the Pacomiuses ? Victory declares in their favor. The Lord gathers Egypt about him, as a shepherd gathers round him his mantle.

8. “Where error once dictated the oracles of falsehood, the voice of truth is now heard ; wherever the false divinities had instituted a superstitious rite, there Jesus had placed a saint.

The grottoes of the Thebais are inhabited, the catacombs of the dead are peopled with the living who are dead to all the passions of the world. The gods, banished from their temples, return to the river and the plough. A burst of triumphant joy resounds from the pyramids of Cheops even to the tomb of Osymandyas. The posterity of Joseph enters into the land of Goshen; and this victory, purchased by the tears of its victors, costs not one tear to the vanquished!

9. "Paul, for a moment, interrupted his discourse, and then again addressed me.

" 'Eudorus,' said he, 'never more abandon the ranks of the soldiers of Jesus Christ. If you are not a rebel to the cause of Heaven, what a crown awaits you! what enviable glory will be yours! My son, what are you still seeking among men? Has the world still charms for you? Do you wish, like the faithless Israelite, to lead the dance around the golden calf? You know not the ruin that awaits this mighty empire, so long the terror and the destroyer of the human race; know, then, that the crimes of these masters of the world are hastening the day of vengeance.

10. " 'They have persecuted the faithful followers of Jesus; they have been drunk with the blood of his martyrs.'

"Here Paul again interrupted his discourse. He stretched forth his hands toward Mount Horeb; his eyes sparkled with animation, a flame of glory played around his head, his wrinkled forehead seemed invested with all the gracefulness of youth: like another Elias, he exclaimed in accents of rapture:

11. " 'Whence come those fugitive families that seek an asylum in the cave of the solitary? Who are those people that flock from the four regions of the earth? Do you see yonder terrific horsemen, the impure children of the demons and of the sorcerers of Scythia?¹ The scourge of God conducts them.² Their horses vie with the leopard in speed: numberless as the sands of the desert, their captives flock before them. What seek these kings, clad in the skins of wild beasts, their heads covered with rude hats, and their faces tinged with green.³ Why

¹The Huns.

²Attila.

³The Goths and Lombards.

do these naked savages butcher their prisoners under the walls of the besieged city?¹ Hold! yon monster has drunk the blood of the Roman who fell beneath his hand!²

12. "They all pour from their native deserts: they march towards this new Babylon. O, queen of cities! how art thou fallen! How is the beauty of thy capitol effaced! How are thy plains deserted, and how dreadful is the solitude that reigns around! But, lo! astonishing spectacle! the cross appears elevated above the scene of surrounding desolation! It takes its station upon new-born Rome, and marks each magnificent edifice as it rises from the dust. Paul, thou father of anchorites, exult with joy ere thou diest! Thy children shall inhabit the ruined palaces of the Cæsars; the porticos whence the sentence of exterminating wrath was pronounced against the Christians, shall be converted into religious cloisters;³ and penitence shall consecrate the spots where crimes once reigned triumphant."

89. HORATIUS.

MACAULAY.

THOMAS BABINGTON MACAULAY was born at the beginning of the present century, and died in 1860. As an essayist, he is remarkable for his brilliant rhetorical powers, splendid tone of coloring, and happy illustrations. Macaulay has also written "Lays of Ancient Rome," which are full of animation and poetic fervor. At the time of his death he was engaged in writing the "History of England;" but the volumes of this work published, partake more of the character of a brilliant romance, than of true and dignified history.

1. ALONE stood brave Horatius,
But constant still in mind;
Thrice thirty thousand foes before,
And the broad flood behind.
"Down with him!" cried false Sextus,
With a smile on his pale face;

¹The Franks and Vandals.

²The Saracen.

³The Thermæ of Diocletian, now inhabited by the Carthusians.

"Now yield thee," cried Lars Porsena,
"Now yield thee to our grace."

2. Round turn'd he, as not deigning
Those craven ranks to see ;
Naught spake he to Lars Porsena,
To Sextus naught spoke he ;
But he saw on Palatinus
The white porch of his home ;
And he spake to the noble river
That rolls by the towers of Rome.
3. "O Tiber ! father Tiber !
To whom the Romans pray,
A Roman's life, a Roman's arms,
Take thou in charge this day !"
So he spake, and speaking sheathed
The good sword by his side,
And, with his harness on his back,
Plunged headlong in the tide.
4. No sound of joy or sorrow
Was heard from either bank ;
But friends and foes in dumb surprise,
With parted lips and straining eyes,
Stood gazing where he sank :
And when above the surges
They saw his crest appear,
All Rome sent forth a rapturous cry,
And even the ranks of Tuscany
Could scarce forbear to cheer.
5. But fiercely ran the current,
Swollen high by months of rain ;
And fast his blood was flowing ;
And he was sore in pain,
And heavy with his armor,
And spent with changing blows ;

And oft they thought him sinking,
But still again he rose.

6. Never, I ween, did swimmer,
In such an evil case,
Struggle through such a raging flood
Safe to the landing-place.
But his limbs were borne up bravely
By the brave heart within,
And our good father Tiber
Bare bravely up his chin.
7. "Curse on him!" quoth false Sextus;
"Will not the villain drown?
But for this stay, ere close of day
We should have sack'd the town!"
"Heaven help him!" quoth Lars Porsena,
"And bring him safe to shore;
For such a gallant feat of arms
Was never seen before."
8. And now he feels the bottom;
Now on dry earth he stands;
Now round him throng the fathers
To press his gory hands;
And now with shouts and clapping,
And noise of weeping loud,
He enters through the river-gate,
Borne by the joyous crowd.
9. When the goodman mends his armor,
And trims his helmet's plume;
When the goodwife's shuttle merrily
Goes flashing through the loom;
With weep'ng and with laughter
Still is the story told,
How well Horatius kept the bridge
In the brave days of old.

90. THE EXILE'S RETURN.

MRS. SADLIER.

1. MANY changes have passed over the face of the Green Isle since I left its rocky shores,—changes public and changes private have taken place among its people—the friends whom I loved and cherished have passed away, ay! every soul; so that, with the aid of my altered appearance, I can pass myself off for a stranger, yet there is something in the very atmosphere which breathes of home. The warm hearts and loving eyes that cheered my boyhood are gone,—the living friends are lost to sight, and I miss their enlivening presence oh! how much!—but the inanimate friends—the old familiar scenes remain.

2. I have taken up my abode in the very house of my nativity—ruined it is, and desolate, yet it is the shell which contained the kernel of my affections. The fields are as green the sky as changeful, the mountains as grand, the sacred valley as lone and solemn, and, above all, the faith and piety of the people is still the same, simple, earnest, nothing doubting all-performing.

3. Oh! I am not alone here, one cannot be alone here, with the monuments of ages of faith around, and the same faith ever living and acting among the people. I can go and kneel by the graves of my parents, and pray that my end may be like theirs, and I feel that the penitent tears I shed are acceptable to God, and that the spirits of those over whose ashes I weep, may one day welcome me in glory, when the last trace of my guilt is effaced by whatever process God pleases.

4. Here, amid the solitude of the desert city, I meditate on the years I passed in a foreign land, and rejoice that the feverish dream is over. Where I herded my goats, a peasant boy, I muse, an old and wrinkled man, on the path of life I have trodden. I stand at the opposite end of existence, and ask myself what is the difference. I have had since what is called “position,” I have wealth still—ay! a fortune, but what that—I am old, friendless, childless, and alone, burdened with harrowing recollections, and ready to sink into the grave, un-honored and unknown.

5. I was poor and unlearned in those days which I now look back on with regret, but I had many hearts to love me; “now,” said I bitterly to myself, “I dare not breathe my name to any hereabouts, for the memory of my crime is traditional among the people, and, did they recognize me, all the wealth I have would not bribe them to look with kindness on him who was once AN APOSTATE.

91. MOUNT ORIENT.

GERALD GRIFFIN.

1. THE M'Orients of Mount Orient, gentle reader, were looked upon in our neighborhood as people of high fashion, unbounded literary attainments, and the most delicate sensibility. They had, until within the last two years, spent the greater portion of their life “abroad” (a word which has a portentous sound in our village). On their return to Mount Orient, they occasioned quite a revolution in all our tastes and customs: they introduced waltzing, smoking cigars, &c. I have seen their open carriage sometimes driving by my window, Miss Mimosa M'Orient seated on the coach-box, and Mr. Ajax M'Orient, her brother, occupying the interior in a frieze jacket and a southwester.

2. But what added most to their influence was that both were considered prodigies of intellect. Ajax M'Orient had written poems in which “rill” rhymed to “hill,” “beam” to “stream,” “mountain” to “fountain,” and “billow” to “willow.” Nay, it was even whispered that he had formed a design of immortalizing Robert Burns, by turning his poems into good English, and had actually performed that operation upon Tam O'Shanter, which was so much changed for the better, that you would hardly know it again. So that he passed in these parts for a surprising genius.

3. He was likewise a universal critic, one of those agreeable persons, who know every thing in the world better than anybody else. He would ask you what you thought of that engraving, and on your selecting a particular group for admiration, he would civilly inform you that you had praised the only defect in the piece. Like the host in Horace, who used to analyze his dishes with his praises in such a manner as to deprive his guests of all inclination to taste them, Ajax would afflict you with pointing out the beauties of a picture, until you began to see no beauty in it.

4. Nor did nature escape him: walk out with him, and he would commend every lake, and rock, and river, until you wished yourself under ground from him. The wind, the sun, the air, the clouds, the waters, nothing was safe from the taint of his villanous commendation. And then his metaphysics; it was all well until he grew metaphysical: so jealous was he of originality on these subjects, that if you assented too hastily to one of his own propositions, ten to one but he would wheel round and assail it, satisfied to prove himself wrong, provided he could prove you wrong also. The navigation of the Red Sea was not a nicer matter than to get through a conversation with Mr. Ajax M'Orient without an argument.

5. On the other hand, Miss Mimosa M'Orient was very handsome, a great enthusiast, an ardent lover of Ireland (unlike her brother, who affected the aristocrat, and curled his lip at O'Connell); with a mind all sunshine and a heart all fire; a soul innocence itself—radiant candor—heroic courage—a glowing zeal for universal liberty—a heart alive to the tenderest feelings of distress—and a mind, to judge by her conversation, imbued with the deepest sentiments of virtue.

6. Miss M'Orient had a near relative living under her protection, named Mary de Courcy, who did not seem to have half her advantages. She was rather plain, had no enthusiasm whatever, very seldom talked of Ireland, had so much common sense in her mind that there was no room for sunshine; and as to fire in her bosom, the academy of Lagoda alone, to all appearance, could have furnished artists capable of extracting it. She might be candid, but she had too much reserve to thrust it forth as if for sale ; and she might have an innocent heart, but she was not forever talking of it. Of courage she did not boast much ; and as to universal liberty, Mary de Courcy, like the knife-grinder, “——seldom loved to meddle

With politics, sir.”

7. Of her feelings she never spoke at all, and on the subject of virtue she could not compete in eloquence with Miss M'Orient.

Still it was a riddle, that while everybody liked Miss de Courcy, the M'Orients seemed to be but little esteemed or loved by those who knew them well and long. Indeed, some looked upon them as of that class of individuals who in our times have overrun society, enfeebling literature with false sentiment, poisoning all wholesome feeling, turning virtue into ostentation, annulling modesty, corrupting the very springs of piety itself by affectation and parade, and selfishly seeking to engross the world's admiration by wearing their virtues (false as they are) like their jewels, all outside.

8. Thus, while Miss M'Orient and her brother were rhyming and romancing about “green fields,” and “groves,” and “lang syne,” and “negroes,” and “birds in cages,” and “sympathy,” and “universal freedom,” they were such a pair of arrant scolds and tyrants in their own house, that no servant could stay two months in their employment. While Miss M'Orient would weep by the hour to hear a blackbird whistle Paddy Carey outside a farmer's cottage, she would see whole families, nay whole nations, reduced to beggary, without shedding a tear, nor think of depriving herself of a morocco album to save a starving fellow-creature's life.

9. It was during one of those seasons of distress, which so frequently afflict the peasantry of Ireland, that Mary de Courcy happened one morning to be watering some flowers that graced the small inclosure in front of Mount Orient House, when a female cottager, accompanied by a group of helpless children, presented themselves before her. Miss de Courcy and Mimosa both had known the woman in better times, and the former was surprised at her present destitution.

10. "Ah! Miss Mary!" said she, "'tis all over with us now, since the house and the man that kept it up are gone together. Hush, child! be quiet! You never again will come over to us now, Miss Mary, in the summer days, to sit down inside our door, an' to take the cup of beautiful thick milk from Nelly, and to talk so kindly to the children. That's all over now, miss—them times are gone."

11. Moved by the poor woman's sorrow, Miss de Courcy for the first time keenly felt her utter want of fortune. She determined, however, to lay before Miss M'Orient in the course of the day the condition of their old cottage acquaintance, and conceived that she entered the room in happy time, when she found her tender-hearted friend dissolved in tears, and with a book between her hands. Still better, it was a work on Ireland, and Mimosa showed her protégée the page, still moistened from the offerings of her sympathy, in which the writer had drawn a very lively picture of the sufferings of her countrymen during a period of more than usual affliction.

12. "Such writing as this, dear Mary!" she exclaimed, in ecstasy of woe, "would move me were the sketch at the Antipodes; but being taken in Ireland, beloved Ireland! imagine its effect upon my feelings—I, who am not myself—I have nothing for you, my good man, go about your business [to an old beggar-man who presented himself with a low bow at the window]—who am not myself when Ireland is the theme! the heart must be insensible indeed that such a picture could not move to pity.

13. "Ah! if the poor Irish—[I declare there are three more beggars on the avenue! Thomas, did not your master give strict orders that not a single beggar should be allowed to set foot inside the gate?—ah! if the poor—[let some one go and turn them out this instant—we must certainly have the dogs let loose again]—if the Irish poor had many such advocates, charity would win its burning way at length even into cold recesses—"

"There's a poor woman wants a dhrop of milk, ma'am," said a servant, appearing at the door.

14. "I haven't it for her—let me not be disturbed [exit] servant]—into the cold recesses of even an absentee landlord's heart. The appeal, dear Mary, is perfectly irresistible; nor can I conceive a higher gratification than that of lending a healing hand to such affliction."

"I am glad to hear you say so, Mimosa, my dear," said Mary, "for I have it in my power to give you the gratification you desire."

"How, Miss de Courcy?" said the sentimental lady in an altered tone, and with some secret alarm.

15. Mary de Courcy was not aware how wide a difference there is, between crying over human misery in hot-pressed small octavo, and relieving it in common life; between sentimentalizing over the picture of human woe, and loving and befriending the original. She did not know that there are creatures who will melt like Niobe at an imaginary distress, while the sight of actual suffering will find them callous as a flint. She proceeded, therefore, with a sanguine spirit, to explain the circumstances of their old neighbors, expecting that all her trouble would be in moderating the extent of her enthusiastic auditor's liberality.

16. But she could not get a shilling from the patriotic Miss M'Orient. That young lady had expended the last of her pocket-money on this beautiful book on Irish misery, so that she had not a sixpence left for the miserable Irish. But then she felt for them! She talked, too, a great deal about "her principles." It was not "her principle," that the poor should ever be relieved by money. It was by forwarding "the march of intellect," those evils should be remedied. As the world became enlightened, men would find it was their interest that human misery should be alleviated in the persons of their fellow-creatures, a regenerative spirit would pervade society, and peace and abundance would shed their light on every land, not even excepting dear, neglected, and down-trodden Ireland.

17. But, as for the widow, she hadn't a sixpence for her. Besides, who knew but she might drink it? Misfortune drives so many to the dram-shop. Well, if Miss de Courcy would provide against that, still, who could say that she was not an impostor! Oh, true, Miss M'Orient knew the woman well. But she had a great many other older and nearer acquaintances; and it was "her principle," that charity was nothing without order. In vulgar language, it should always begin at home. At all events, she could and would do nothing.

"Ah, Mimosa," said Mary, "do you think that vulgar rule has never an exception?"

"Never—Mary—never. Send in luncheon" [to a servant].

92. THE CRUSADES.

WORDSWORTH.

WILLIAM WORDSWORTH was born in England in 1770, and died in 1850; he belonged to what is called the "Lake-School" of poets. He has left no poem of any length worthy of admiration throughout; but many of his shorter pieces are unsurpassed in the English language.

1. FURL we the sails, and pass with tardy oars
 Through these bright regions, casting many a glance
 Upon the dream-like issues, the romance
 Of many-color'd life that fortune pours
 Round the Crusaders, till on distant shores
 Their labors end: or they return to lie,
 The vow perform'd, in cross-legg'd effigy,
 Devoutly stretch'd upon their chancel-floors.
 Am I deceived? Or is their requiem chanted
 By voices never mute when Heaven unties
 Her inmost, softest, tenderest harmonies?
 Requiem which earth takes up with voice undaunted,
 When she would tell how brave, and good, and wise,
 For their high guerdon not in vain have panted.

2. As faith thus sanctified the warrior's crest,
 While from the papal unity there came
 What feebler means had fail'd to give, one aim
 Diffused through all the regions of the west;
 So does her unity its power attest

By works of art, that shed on the outward frame
 Of worship, glory and grace, which who shall blame
 That ever look'd to Heaven for final rest ?
 Hail, countless temples, that so well befit
 Your ministry ! that, as ye rise and take Form, spirit, and character from holy writ,
 Give to devotion, wheresoe'er awake,
 Pinions of high and higher sweep, and make
 The unconverted soul with awe submit !

THE VIRGIN.

3. MOTHER ! whose virgin bosom was uncross'd
 With the least shade of thought to sin allied ;
 Woman ! above all women glorified,
 Our tainted nature's solitary boast ;
 Purer than foam on central ocean tost,
 Brighter than eastern skies at daybreak strewn
 With fancied roses, than the unblemish'd moon
 Before her vane begins on Heaven's blue coast,
 Thy image falls to earth. Yet some, I ween,
 Not unforgiven, the suppliant knee might bend,
 As to a visible power, in which did blend
 All that was mix'd and reconciled in thee
 Of mother's love with maiden purity,
 Of high with low, celestial with terrene.

93. DE FRONTENAC.

BIBAUD.

1. LOUIS DE BUADE, Count de Frontenac, was the most illustrious governor of New France, under the French domination. He was twice appointed governor, in 1672 and 1689. Colonel of horse in a regiment of cavalry at seventeen, he was made lieutenant-general after twelve years' service, and commanded detachments in Italy, Flanders, and Germany, whilst the Countess de Frontenac, the friend of Madam de Sévigné and Adam de Maintenon, made herself famous at court. Recommended by Turenne, he was the last defender of Candia, which he was forced to evacuate. It was then that he was named governor and lieutenant-general of New France. His first administration was not successful ; he was despotic, quarrelled with every one, issued warrants, like the monarch himself, imprisoned or banished the first persons of the colony, had himself called high and mighty lord, and had, like the Viceroy de Tracy, the use of body-guards. He was recalled, and learned to be more moderate. Returning to Canada at the period of the Lachine massacre, that disaster forced him to abandon a project he had entertained of invading New York. He, nevertheless, carried the war into New England, and into the heart of the Iroquois country, and covered himself with glory by his defence of Quebec against Admiral Phipps ; Louis XIV. had a medal struck in honor of that event. The savages, in particular, regarded him as something more than human ; and the Sioux, as yet but little heard of, sent him ambassadors. Louis de Buade was great both in head and heart. He has been accused of having been too fond of command, and of carrying the pretensions of power too far ; but these faults disappeared with age and experience. Hence it has been said of him by an eminent French writer that he had all the qualities of a great man ; the firmness to command, and the mildness and magnanimity to make himself beloved. He was generous, and had the dignity and stateliness of a king. He was at Quebec a fitting reflection of Louis XIV. at Versailles. A word, a look from him electrified the martial colonists of Canada ; he was the delight of New France, the terror of the Iroquois, the father of nations allied with the French ; his activity was equalled only by his courage. Frontenac died at Quebec in the year 1698, and was buried in the Church of the Recollets, which is now no longer in existence. He was more friendly to the Recollets than to the Jesuits, and it was their Superior, Goyer, who pronounced his funeral oration. That piece of sacred eloquence, with the name of "Buade," given to a street of Quebec, and that "Frontenac," to a county of Upper Canada, are the sole mementoes that remain to the country of this great celebrity.

94. THE CATACOMBS.

MANAHAN.

REV. AMBROSE MANAHAN, D. D., born in New York city. He finished his studies at the Propaganda, in Rome, and was ordained priest for the diocese of New York. He has recently made a valuable contribution to Catholic literature, in his work entitled "The Triumph of the Catholic Church."

1. It was in the year 1599 that Bosius, anxious to discover some of the many subterranean cemeteries mentioned by ancient writers as situated near the Via Appia and the Ardeatina, went out of the Capena gate, along the Appian road, to the place where our Lord appeared to Peter—thence going along the Ardeatina way to where it is crossed by a road leading from St. Sebastian's to St. Paul's Church—he carefully examined that whole ground in search of some hole that would give him admission into the subterranean city.

2. He perceived, at last, in the middle of a field, some arches that led him to suspect he had come upon the object of his desires. He managed to effect an entrance, and made his way down until he found himself standing in the habitations of the dead. Numberless monuments cut out of the clay tell him this at a glance. He hastens along this first road, to its terminus, where he finds two others striking off in different directions: he enters the one to the right—it is encumbered and choked up with ruins;—he returns and starts upon the one to the left, along which he journeys until he discovers in the ground, under his feet, a small hole or passage.

3. He creeps into this opening, and almost snake-like keeps moving forwards until delighted with, at last, the sight of high cryptæ into which he is ushered from his narrow winding. Here, in wide halls and endless corridors, he beholds on every side closet-like openings carved out of the side walls for the reception of dead bodies; some of nobler appearance are decorated with arches so as to give each its own alcove. He remarks but few sepulchres in the ground-floor, only placed there, no doubt, when no more unoccupied room was left in the walls.

4. The greater part of the tombs are shut with marble slabs, or closed up with brick-work ; some gape wide open, and there lie the remains of his forefathers of the first ages of the church ; short tombs for children are interspersed among the larger ; the same difference appears in the size of the bones ;—some of them are hard and seem almost petrified, while others fall to ashes when touched. Far on in the most hidden recesses he came upon three or four chambers that seemed to have had their walls once whitened, though no paintings were visible on them ; fragments of inscriptions lay scattered all around the chapels.

5. He more than once found himself in large round halls, from which a number of roads started out in every direction, like lines from the centre towards the superficies of a circle, or like the spokes in a wheel. These stretched away endlessly as far as he ever ascertained, and induced him to call this place a labyrinth indeed ! Again and again he returned to his exploring expedition, and, often wearied but never satiated, his admiration gave the palm to this above all the other cemeteries which he had visited in all the course of his forty years' search. He calls it, in size, beauty and splendor, the chief one of all the catacombs.

6. With all his patience and enthusiasm he could not say that he had ever reached the utmost bounds of this vast and extraordinary place, although he often spent whole days and nights travelling around through its interminable windings. Every day new outlets made their appearance,—new roads were discovered,—leading out of his best-known districts. It was his belief that these roads and those under St. Sebastian's not only communicated together, but kept on over to St. Paul's, extended to the Annunziata and out to the Three Fountains, and even stretched back as far as the walls of Rome ; and in every thing concerning these catacombs Bosius is a sure guide.

7. And yet, more wonderful to relate ! this sepulchral city—already so far down beneath the surface of the earth—has its own immense underways, which, laid out on a similar plan, underlie its excavated streets no one knows how far. Stairs cut out of the clay invite the astonished visitor to go down from the level of this first souterrain into a second maze of streets and corridors, furnished, like the former, with their ranges of tombs (loculi), their chambers and chapels. Brick walls are here found supporting many parts of these sub-subterranean establishments.

8. Most of the roads have been rendered impassable by the clay that has fallen in and encumbered them. They may perchance be cleared one day by some unterrified adventurer, but only when those above them shall have first become exhausted by his long researches. Even this second underground district has its own under-works still deeper in the bosom of the earth. Short and small steps in the clay take you down from the lower to this lowest of the excavated cemeteries. Upper apartments, basement-rooms and sub-cellar vaults in a house are familiar ideas, but our minds can hardly realize the conception carried out as it is here.

9. I can state, however, that I have personally verified the exactness of these discoveries, and stood even in that third, lowest tier of routes, one below the other. Only few roads are opened in the lowest range; there do not appear to be many simple tombs there as in the upper catacombs, but a number of larger chambers reserved, one would suppose, for the burial of distinguished families.

10. Far away in the outskirts of this subterranean city,—in the most hidden recesses of the catacombs, perpetual fountains of limpid water gleam under the light of the visitor's taper: in one sequestered corner, several steps cut in the earth, lead you down to drink of abundant streams of sweet and salubrious water,—streams where, no doubt, many a martyr washed his wounds, and many a pursued and fainting fugitive came, like the panting deer, to be refreshed. These waters have, doubtless, flowed on the head of many a valorous neophyte, who sleeps among the martyrs in this subterranean dormitory.

11. In these deepest corridors you behold the outlines only of some tombs or graves marked in the clay walls, as if ready for the work of being dug out for the next burial. Why was the work suspended? Were the diggers arrested here by the glorious news of the appearance of the cross in the skies, and led to fling away their tools and their garments of sadness by Constantine's call to the Catholic faithful to come up in joy and freedom out of their dismal places of refuge, and drive the remnants of heathen superstition from the city of the Cæsars?

12. So it seemed to me when, filled with the spirit of the place and its memories, I stood and looked upon those unfinished graves. Then the Church of God came forth in her deep-dyed purple robes from the catacombs, and fastened the Cross of Christ on the imperial banner, and took her seat on the Vatican mount, our holy Sion hill. When Israel no longer pitched her tents around the ark in the wilderness, Jerusalem rehearsed, amid the splendors of Solomon's temple, the wonders of the land of bondage, the passage over the sea and through the desert.

13. The Rome of to-day shows how her enduring faith has carried along with it safely, through all vicissitudes, the shrines and tombs and relics of her martyrs. The rites of the Roman Catholic Church shall forever keep alive a grateful, universal and festival remembrance of the pristine scenes of her trials and triumph. Do not the very lights of our altars burn more brightly to our eyes when we recall the fortitude and devotion that knelt in their first gleam through those dismal chambers? and do not our censers perfume the sanctuary with recollections of the fragrance of piety that mingled with the first blest incense which they flung around through the foulness and damp airs of our primeval temples? Throughout the whole world treasures from the catacombs enrich the altars and stones of our sacrifice.

14. A faithless world looks with amazement on the unfading Roman scarlet, and the pomp and magnificence displayed in the Catholic ceremonial. The most gorgeous embellishment of our solemn services but faintly express the sombre and sublime grandeur in which our minds call up those ancient solemnities from which our decorations and our ritual took their rise: when the first Popes administered our sacraments to candidates for the palm of martyrdom, and the august and tremendous sacrifice of the mass was offered up in those excavated sanctuaries—whose purple hangings were cloths tinged from the veins of the followers of the Lamb—whose most rare and precious ornaments were the blood-stained sponges and nails and instruments of torture—while the venerable bodies of the slaughtered flock upheld the altar on which the divine sacrifice was offered up to God.

95. THE RELIGIOUS MILITARY ORDERS.

ARCHBISHOP PURCELL.

JOHN B. PURCELL, D. D., Archbishop of Cincinnati, was born 27th of February, 1800, in Mallow, County Cork, Ireland. Emigrated when a boy to America; studied in Mount St. Mary's, Emmettsburg; went to Paris, followed up his theological studies at St. Sulpice, where he was ordained priest. On his return to the United States, Dr. Purcell became Professor of Theology in his Alma Mater, at Emmettsburg, and was subsequently appointed President of that noble institution. He was consecrated Bishop of Cincinnati on the 13th of October, 1833, and was since made Archbishop of that province. Although this eminent prelate has not had time amid the onerous duties of his high office to apply himself to literary pursuits, proofs are not wanting that he might attain distinction in the walks of literature. Soon after his consecration as Bishop of Cincinnati, he was called upon to defend the doctrines of the Church in a protracted discussion with the Rev. Mr. Campbell, founder of the Campbellism, in which he distinguished himself as well by his skill in dialectics, as by profound scholastic attainments. The archbishop's lectures, delivered on various subjects, are admirable specimens of such composition, and he has done much for the diffusion of valuable information. What he has accomplished and achieved for the cause of religion is well known to the Catholics in America; and when future historians trace the fortunes of the Church in the New World, the name of Purcell shall be held in honor, as one of the first great patriarchs of the West.

By the religious military orders, I mean, 1. The Knights of St. John of Jerusalem, or Hospitallers, or of Rhodes, or of Malta, as the same order has been successively designated. 2. The Templars. 3. The Teutonic Knights; leaving out of view the Knights of the Holy Sepulchre, of Calatrava, of St. Jago, of the Sword, and others, which cannot be regarded as strictly religious orders, have no such name in history, nor rendered such important services to Christendom as the first three which I have first named.

* * * * *

In the middle of the eleventh century, the merchants of Amalfi, in the kingdom of Naples, who traded with Egypt in rich merchandise and works of art, and who had often experienced in their visits to the Holy Land the cruelty of Greeks and Saracens, purchased, by costly presents to the Caliph and his courtiers, permission for the Latin Christians to have two hospitals in Jerusalem, one for men and the other for women. The chapels attached to these hospitals were dedicated, respectively, to St. John the Almoner, and St. Magdalen. They were served by self-appointed seculars, whose charity induced them to forego the pleasure of homes and friends, to devote themselves to the care of the sick, the poor, and the stranger, in the Holy City. This was the cradle of the Knights Hospitallers.

* * * * *

3. The Hospitallers were divided into three bodies, or classes. 1st. Those distinguished by birth, or the rank they had held in the army of the Crusaders. 2d. Ecclesiastics who were to superintend the hospitals, and serve as chaplains to the army in peace and war. 3d. Lay-brothers, or servants. A new classification was afterwards made from the seven different languages spoken by the Knights—i. e., those of Provence, Auvergne, France, Italy, Aragon; a little later including Castile and Portugal, and England, until she apostatized.

4. The government was aristocratic. The supreme authority was vested in a council, of which the Grand Master was president. The different houses of the Order were administered by preceptors, or overseers, removable at pleasure and who were held to a strict accountability. The same austerities were practised by all, and the necessity of bearing arms was not suffered to interfere with the strict observance of the convent. Purity of life, and prompt obedience to orders, and detachment from the world, were the distinguishing virtues of the soldier monks.

5. THE TEMPLARS were founded by Hugh de Payens and eight others, all natives of France, to protect the pilgrims on their way to and from Jerusalem, and to unite with the Hospitallers and aid the king of Jerusalem in repelling the incursions, humbling the pride, and chastising the audacity of the infidels. They were too proud to serve in hospitals. Their costume was a white mantle, with a red cross on the left breast. Their name was derived from their residence near the Temple. They were approved by Honorius II. Their rule was given them by St. Bernard, by order of the Council of Troyes. Their exemption from what was considered the degrading, or ignoble, obligation of waiting on the sick, drew to the new Order a vast multitude of the richest lords and princes of Europe, so that the Templars soon outshone the Hospitallers in the splendor of wealth—but never in that of virtue. Nevertheless, they continued for centuries to render essential services to Christendom in checking the aggressions of Mohammedanism.

6. THE TEUTONIC KNIGHTS commenced their existence on the plain before Ptolemais, or St. Jean d'Acre. Many of these brave Germans, who had followed their gallant Emperor, Frederick I., and his son, the Duke of Suabia, to the holy wars, when wounded in the frequent sorties of the garrison, lay helpless on the battle-field, unable to communicate their wants and sufferings in a language unknown to their brethren in arms. A few Germans, who had come by sea from Bremen and Lubeck, commiserating the hard fate of their countrymen, took the sails of their ships and made tents, into which they collected the wounded, and served them with their own hands. Forty of the chiefs of the same nation united with them in the work of charity, and from this noble association sprang a new religious and military order like to those of the Templars and Hospitallers. They were approved by Pope Celestine III., at the prayer of Henry VI. of Germany, in 1192, receiving the name of the Teutonic Knights of the House of St. Mary of Jerusalem. They got this name from the fact of a German having built in Jerusalem a hospital and oratory under the invocation of the blessed Virgin, for the sick pilgrims from his fatherland. Their uniform was a white mantle, with a black cross; they were bound by the three vows, like the Hospitallers and Templars. Before being admitted to the Order, they were required to make oath that they were Germans, of noble birth, and that they engaged for life in the care of the poor and sick, and the defence of the Holy Places. These were the three orders on which Christendom relied, more than on the irregular efforts of the Crusaders, for the protection of the Holy Land.

96. MARY MAGDALEN.

CALLANAN.

CALLANAN was born in Ireland in 1795; died in 1829. During his life, he was one of the popular contributors to 'Blackwood's Magazine.' His reputation as a poet is well established.

1. To the hall of that feast came the sinful and fair;
She heard in the city that Jesus was there;
She mark'd not the splendor that blazed on their board,
But silently knelt at the feet of her Lord.
2. The hair from her forehead, so sad and so meek,
Hung dark o'er the blushes that burn'd on her cheek;
And so still and so lowly she bent in her shame,
It seem'd as her spirit had flown from its frame.
3. The frown and the murmur went round through them all,
That one so unhallow'd should tread in that hall;
And some said the poor would be objects more meet,
For the wealth of the perfumes she shower'd at his feet.
4. She mark'd but her Saviour, she spoke but in sighs,
She dared not look up to the heaven of his eyes;
And the hot tears gush'd forth at each heave of her
breast,
As her lips to his sandals she throbbingly press'd.
5. On the cloud after tempests, as shineth the bow,
In the glance of the sunbeam, as melteth the snow,
He look'd on that lost one—her sins were forgiven;
And Mary went forth in the beauty of heaven.

97. DIALOGUE WITH THE GOUT

FRANKLIN.

BENJAMIN FRANKLIN was born in Boston in 1706. In early life he was a printer. He was a prominent politician before, during, and after the Revolutionary War, a member of the Continental Congress, and subsequently Minister of the United States to France, having at an earlier date, been the agent of the Colonies in England. But he was particularly distinguished for his philosophical discoveries, especially that of the identity of lightning and electricity. He died in 1790.

1. Franklin. Eh! Oh! Eh! What have I done to merit these cruel sufferings?

Gout. Many things: you have ate and drank too freely, and too much indulged those legs of yours in their indolence.

Franklin. Who is it that accuses me?

Gout. It is I, even I, the Gout.

Franklin. What! my enemy in person?

Gout. No; not your enemy.

Franklin. I repeat it, my enemy; for you would not only torment my body to death, but ruin my good name. You reproach me as a glutton and a tippler: now all the world that knows me will allow that I am neither the one nor the other.

2. Gout. The world may think as it pleases. It is always very complaisant to itself, and sometimes to its friends; but I very well know that the quantity of meat and drink proper for a man who takes a reasonable degree of exercise would be too much for another who never takes any.

Franklin. I take—Eh! Oh!—as much exercise—Eh!—as I can, Madam Gout. You know my sedentary state; and on that account, it would seem, Madam Gout, as if you might spare me a little, seeing it is not altogether my own fault.

3. Gout. Not a jot: your rhetoric and your politeness are thrown away: your apology avails nothing. If your situation in life is a sedentary one, your amusements, your recreations, at least, should be active. You ought to walk or ride; or if the weather prevents that, play at something.

But let us examine your course of life. While the mornings are long, and you have leisure to go abroad, what do you do? Why instead of gaining an appetite for breakfast, by salutary exercise, you amuse yourself with books, pamphlets, or newspapers, which commonly are not worth the reading. Yet you eat an inordinate breakfast: four dishes of tea, with cream, one or two buttered toasts, with slices of hung beef; which I fancy are not things the most easily digested.

4. Immediately afterwards, you sit down to write at your desk, or converse with persons who apply to you on business. Thus the time passes till one, without any kind of bodily exercise. But all this I could pardon, in regard, as you say, to your sedentary condition; but what is your practice after dinner? Walking in the beautiful gardens of those friends with whom you have dined would be the choice of men of sense; yours is to be fixed down to chess, where you are found engaged for two or three hours.

5. This is your perpetual recreation: the least eligible of any for a sedentary man, because, instead of accelerating the motion of the fluids, the rigid attention it requires helps to retard the circulation and obstruct internal secretions. Wrapt in the speculations of this wretched game, you destroy your constitution. What can be expected from such a course of living but a body replete with stagnant humors, ready to fall a prey to all kinds of dangerous maladies, if I, the Gout, did not occasionally bring you relief by agitating those humors, and so purifying or dissipating them? Fie, then, Mr. Franklin! But, amidst my instructions, I had almost forgot to administer my wholesome corrections; so take that twinge, and that.

6. Franklin. Oh! Eh! Oh! Oh! As much instruction as you please, Madam Gout, and as many reproaches; but pray, Madam, a truce with your corrections!

Gout. No, sir, no; I will not abate a particle of what is so much for your good, therefore—

Franklin. Oh! Eh! It is not fair to say I take no exercise, when I do, very often, go out to dine, and return in my carriage.

7. Gout. That, of all imaginable exercises, is the most slight and insignificant, if you allude to the motion of a carriage suspended on springs. By observing the degree of heat obtained by different kinds of motion, we may form an estimate of the quantity of exercise given by each. Thus, for example, if you turn out to walk in winter with cold feet, in an hour's time you will be in a glow all over; ride on horseback, the same effect will scarcely be perceived by four hours' round trotting; but if you loll in a carriage, such as you have mentioned, you may travel all day, and gladly enter the last inn to warm your feet by a fire.

8. Flatter yourself, then, no longer, that half an hour's airing in your carriage deserves the name of exercise. Providence has appointed few to roll in carriages, while he has given to all a pair of legs, which are machines infinitely more commodious and serviceable. Be grateful, then, and make a proper use of yours.

98. MAGNANIMITY OF A CHRISTIAN EMPEROR.

SCHLEGEL.

FREDERIC VON SCHLEGEL was born in 1772; died in 1829. Schlegel was one of the most distinguished writers of Germany—as a poet, critic, essayist, and historian. In 1808 he became a Catholic. For many years of his life, in connection with his brother, Augustus William, he was engaged in the publication of the “Athenæum,” a critical journal, which did much towards establishing a more independent spirit in German literature.—Cyclopedia of Biography.

1. AFTER the downfall of the Carlovingian family, the empire was restored to its pristine vigor by the election of the noble Conrad, duke of the Franconians. This pious, chivalrous, wise, and valiant monarch, had to contend with many difficulties, and fortune did not always smile upon his efforts. But he terminated his royal career with a deed, which alone exalts him far above other celebrated conquerors and rulers, and was attended with more important consequences to after-times, than have resulted from many brilliant reigns; and this single deed, which forms the brightest jewel in the crown of glory that adorns those ages, so clearly reveals the true nature of Christian principles of government, and the Christian idea of political power, that I may be permitted to notice it briefly.

2. When he felt his end approaching, and perceived that of the four principal German nations, the Saxons alone, by their superior power, were capable of bringing to a successful issue the mighty struggle in which all Europe was at that critical period involved, he bade his brother carry to Henry, duke of Saxony, hitherto the rival of his house, and who was as magnanimous as fortunate, the holy lance and consecrated sword of the ancient kings, with all the other imperial insignia. He thus pointed him out as the successor of his own choice, and in his regard for the general weal, and in his anxiety to maintain a great pacific power capable of defending the common interests of Christendom, he disregarded the suggestions of national vanity, and sacrificed even the glory of his own house.

3. So wise and judicious, as well as heroic, a sacrifice of all selfish glory, for what the interests of society and the necessities of the times evidently demanded, is that principle which forms the very foundation, and constitutes the true spirit, of all Christian governments. And by this very deed Conrad became, after Charlemagne, the second restorer of the western empire, and the real founder of the German nation; for it was this noble resolve of his great soul, which alone saved the Germanic body from a complete dismemberment. The event fully justified his choice. The new king, Henry, victorious on every side, labored to build a great number of cities, to restore the reign of peace and justice, and to maintain the purity of Christian manners and Christian institutions; and prepared for his mightier son, the great Otho, the restoration of the Christian empire in Italy, whither the latter was loudly and unanimously called.

99. THE MARTYRDOM OF ST. AGNES.

DE VERE.

SIR AUBREY DE VERE—an English poet of the present day, has written a volume of beautiful poems, distinguished by their true spirit of Catholic devotion.

Angels.

1. BEARING lilies in our bosom,
Holy Agnes, we have flown

Mission'd from the Heaven of Heavens
Unto thee, and thee alone.
We are coming, we are flying,
To behold thy happy dying.

Agnes.

2. Bearing lilies far before you,
Whose fresh odors, backward blown,
Light those smiles upon your faces,
Mingling sweet breath with your own,
Ye are coming, smoothly, slowly,
To the lowliest of the lowly.

Angels.

3. Unto us the boon was given ;
One glad message, holy maid,
On the lips of two blest spirits,
Like an incense-grain was laid.
As it bears us on like lightning,
Cloudy skies are round us brightening.

Agnes.

4. I am here, a mortal maiden ;
If our Father aught hath said,
Let me hear His words and do them.
Ought I not to feel afraid,
As ye come, your shadows flinging
O'er a breast, to meet them springing ?

Angels.

5. Agnes, there is joy in Heaven ;
Gladness, like the day, is flung
O'er the spaces never measured,
And from every angel's tongue
Swell those songs of impulse vernal,
All whose echoes are eternal.

6. Agnes, from the depth of Heaven
Joy is rising, like a spring
Borne above its grassy margin,
Borne in many a crystal ring ;
Each o'er beds of wild flowers gliding,
Over each low murmurs sliding.
- 7 When a Christian lies expiring,
Angel choirs, with plumes outspread,
Bend above his death-bed, singing ;
That, when Death's mild sleep is fled,
There may be no harsh transition
While he greets the Heavenly Vision.

Agnes.

8. Am I dreaming, blessed angels?
Late ye floated two in one ;
Now, a thousand radiant spirits
Round me weave a glistening zone.
Lilies, as they wind extending,
Roses with those lilies blending.
9. See ! th' horizon's ring they circle ;
Now they gird the zenith blue ;
And now, o'er every brake and billow
Float like mist and flash like dew.
All the earth, with life o'erflowing,
Into heavenly shapes is growing !
10. They are rising ! they are rising !
As they rise, the veil is riven !
They are rising ! I am rising—
Rising with them into Heaven !—
Rising with those shining legions
Into life's eternal regions !

100. EUROPEAN CIVILIZATION.

BALMEZ.

ABBÉ J. BALMEZ, born at Vich, in Catalonia, Spain, in 1810; died, 1848. In lofty eloquence, sound philosophy, solid and profound erudition, this illustrious Spanish author of the present century stands unrivalled. His work on the "Civilization of Europe," should be familiar to every intelligent mind. His more recent work on "Fundamental Philosophy" (admirably translated by Henry F. Brownson), is the best work on Christian Philosophy of which the English language can boast.

1. It is a fact now generally acknowledged, and openly confessed, that Christianity has exercised a very important and salutary influence on the development of European civilization. If this fact has not yet had given to it the importance which it deserves, it is because it has not been sufficiently appreciated. With respect to civilization, a distinction is sometimes made between the influence of Christianity and that of Catholicity: its merits are lavished on the former, and stinted to the latter, by those who forget that, with respect to European civilization, Catholicity can always claim the principal share; and, for many centuries, an exclusive one; since during a very long period, she worked alone at the great work. People have not been willing to see that when Protestantism appeared in Europe, the work was bordering on completion; with an injustice and ingratitude which I cannot describe, they have reproached Catholicity with the spirit of barbarism, ignorance, and oppression, while they were making an ostentatious display of the rich civilization, knowledge, and liberty, for which they were principally indebted to her.

2. If they did not wish to fathom the intimate connection between Catholicity and European civilization,—if they had not the patience necessary for the long investigations into which this examination would lead them, at least it would have been proper to take a glance at the condition of countries where the Catholic religion has not exerted all her influence during centuries of trouble, and compare them with those in which she has been predominant. The East and the West, both subject to great revolutions, both professing Christianity, but in such a way that the Catholic principle was weak and vacillating in the East, while it was energetic and deeply rooted in the West ; these, we say, would have afforded two very good points of comparison to estimate the value of Christianity without Catholicity, when the civilization and the existence of nations were at stake.

3. In the West, the revolutions were multiplied and fearful; the chaos was at its height ; and, nevertheless, out of chaos came light and life. Neither the barbarism of the nations who inundated those countries, and established themselves there, nor the furious assaults of Islamism, even in the days of its greatest power and enthusiasm, could succeed in destroying the germs of a rich and fertile civilization. In the East, on the contrary, all tended to old age and decay ; nothing revived ; and, under the blows of the power which was ineffectual against us, all was shaken to pieces. The spiritual power of Rome, and its influence on temporal affairs, have certainly borne fruits very different from those produced under the same circumstances, by its violent opponents.

4. If Europe were destined one day again to undergo a general and fearful revolution, either by a universal spread of revolutionary ideas, or by a violent invasion of social and proprietary rights by pauperism ; if the Colossus of the North, seated on its throne of eternal snows, with knowledge in its head, and blind force in its hands, possessing at once the means of civilization and unceasingly turning towards the East, the South, and the West, that covetous and crafty look which in history is the characteristic march of all invading empires ; if, availing itself of a favorable moment, it were to make an attempt on the independence of Europe, then we should perhaps have a proof of the value of the Catholic principle in a great extremity ; then we should feel the power of the unity which is proclaimed and supported by Catholicity, and while calling to mind the middle ages, we should come to acknowledge one of the causes of the weakness of the East and the strength of the West.

5. Then would be remembered a fact, which, though but of yesterday, is falling into oblivion, viz. : that the nation whose heroic courage broke the power of Napoleon was proverbially

Catholic ; and who knows whether, in the attempts which the Vicar of Jesus Christ has deplored in such touching language,—who knows whether it be not the secret influence of a presentiment, perhaps even a foresight, of the necessity of weakening that sublime power, which has been in all ages, when the cause of humanity was in question, the centre of great attempts ? But let us return.

6. It cannot be denied that, since the sixteenth century, European civilization has shown life and brilliancy ; but it is a mistake to attribute this phenomenon to Protestantism. In order to examine the extent and influence of a fact, we ought not to be content with the events which have followed it ; it is also necessary to consider whether these events were already prepared ; whether they are any thing more than the necessary result of anterior facts ; and we must take care not to reason in a way which is justly declared to be sophistical by logicians, post hoc, ergo propter hoc: after that, therefore on account of Protestantism. Without Protestantism, and before it, European civilization was already very much advanced, thanks to the labors and influence of the Catholic religion ; that greatness and splendor which it subsequently displayed were not owing to it, but arose in spite of it.

01. ST. FRANCIS DE SALES' LAST WILL AND TESTAMENT.

ST. FRANCIS DE SALES.

ST. FRANCIS DE SALES, Bishop of Geneva, was one of the most accomplished noblemen of Savoy. Possessed of great personal attractions and brilliant talents, his friends saw the most distinguished worldly career opened for him ; but deaf to their remonstrances and entreaties, he embraced the ecclesiastical state. He died in 1622, aged fifty-six. During his life he converted seventy-two thousand unbelievers. He was celebrated as a preacher. His writings are full of beauties. But his greatest work—the fruits of which we see around us in America as well as in Europe—is the establishment of the Order of the Visitation. This religious order so zealously devoted to the education of youth—is a true type of the piety, burning, and zeal of its saintly founder.

1. AFTER being beat about on the boisterous ocean of this world, and experiencing so many dangers of shipwreck, from storms, tempests, and rocks of vanity, I present myself before thee, O my God! to account for the talents thy infinite goodness has intrusted to my charge. I am now within the sight of land. How I pity the lot of those I leave behind, still exposed to such imminent dangers! How treacherous are the attractions of life, how strong its charms, how fascinating its blandishments! Where are you, O devout souls? I could wish to have your company in this my passage, or to join you in your holy exercises. Prepare to go to the celestial Jerusalem.

2. Behold the effect of life! Life can produce no other work than death; while solid devotion produces eternal life. It is the autumn season, in which fruits are gathered for eternity. This plant, which has received its increase from heaven, will soon be removed, and mortals will see no more of it than its roots, the sad spoils of corruption. The flower, which the sun has decorated with such brilliant colors, speedily fades. Consider that life flies like a shadow, passes as a dream, evaporates as smoke, and that human ambition can embrace nothing solid. Every thing is transitory.

3. The sun, which arises above our horizon, precipitates his course to tread on the heels of night; while darkness solicits the return of light, to hasten the most beautiful parts of our universe to destruction. Rivers are continually rushing to the sea, their centre, as if they were there to find rest. The moon appears in the firmament, sometimes full, at other times decreasing, and seems to take a pleasure, as if her task and career were soon to end. Winter robs the trees of their foliage, to read us a lesson of mortality. No tie, no affection whatever, holds me now to this earth. I have resigned my will entirely into thy hands.

4. Thou hast, O Lord! long since taught me how to die. My inclinations to the world have been long dead. Mortifications have deadened my body, my soul wishes to shake off this coil, and I only value and esteem that life which is found in thee. In proportion as I feel my body weaken, my spirit grows stronger. I am ready to burst from my prison. I here see, as in a mirror, what beatitude is. How unspeakable are the delights of a soul in the grace of God! Sensual pleasures being satiety and disgust, true pledge of inanity and imperfection; while pleasurable enjoyments of the soul are infinite, and never pall upon the palate. Let us then quit this world, and ascend through the aid of God's mercy, to heaven.

5. And you, Christian souls, are you not content to accompany me? Do you fear the passage? Are you not already dead to the world, that you may live to God? Can you fear the pains of dissolution, when you reflect what your Saviour has suffered for the love of you? Keep your conscience in a fit state to give a satisfactory account of your actions: imagine the judgments of God are at every hour suspended over your head; that life holds by a single thread, by a nothing; and that in the gardens of this world death lurks under every rose and violet, as the serpent under the grass.

6. Now that I am quitting this world, Christian souls, what legacy can I leave you? Earthly possessions you have renounced, and holy poverty you have embraced. I therefore bequeath to you humility, the true lapis lydius, or touchstone of devotion, which can discriminate piety from hypocrisy; she is the mother of all virtues, ever occupied in reforming our lives and actions, and always walks accompanied by charity. Oh, devout souls! how much more difficult is the task of acquiring this Christian humility than the other virtues! Oh! how does nature suffer, when you are told to humble your mind, to make yourselves little, to pardon your enemies!

7. What a struggle does it cost to break down and totally destroy that tender love of self, the mortal enemy to humiliations and abjection. This legacy of humility, I trust you will both receive and practise. As for thee, my God! I shall not leave thee my soul; it has long been thine; thou hast redeemed it with the price of thy blood, and withdrawn it from the captivity of sin and death; it will be happy, if, pardoning its faults, thou wilt receive it into thy embraces! Now I must give in my accounts, the thought of divine justice makes me tremble, but the thought of divine mercy gives me hopes, I throw myself into thy arms, O Lord, to solicit pardon, I will cast myself at thy feet to bathe them with my tears, to plead for me ; and through thy infinite goodness, I may receive the effects of thy infinite mercies.

102. ARCH CONFRATERNITY OF S. GIOVANNI DECOLLATO.

MAGUIRE.

JOHN FRANCIS MAGUIRE, a distinguished Irish member of the British Parliament, and editor of the "Cork Examiner." Within the last few years, Mr. Maguire has attained considerable distinction as a true patriot, an orator, and a man of letters. His work on "Rome, its Ruler, and its Institutions," is a valuable addition to Catholic literature, and is the best defence of the Roman government that has yet appeared.

1. MORICHINI gives an interesting account of this confraternity, whose mission is one of singular charity,—to bring comfort and consolation to the last moments of the condemned. It appears that on the 8th day of May, 1488, some good Florentines, then in Rome, considering that those who died by the hand of justice had no one to visit and comfort them in their last hours, instituted a confraternity which was at first called Della Misericordia, and afterwards by its present name, from the church of their patron. Pope Innocent VIII. granted the society a place under the Campidolio, in which they erected a church to St. John the Baptist ; and here they were allowed to bury the remains of those who had been executed. Their objects were sympathized with, and their efforts assisted, by successive Pontiffs. Tuscans only, or their descendants to the third generation are received into the society.

2. On the day previous to the execution of a criminal, they invite, by public placard, prayers for his happy passage to the other life. In the night of that day, the brothers, some half dozen in number, including priests, assemble in the church of S. Giovanni di Fiorentini, not far from the New Prisons. Here they recite prayers, imploring the Divine assistance in the melancholy office which they are about to perform. They then proceed to the prisons, walking, two by two, in silence, some of the brothers bearing lanterns in their hands. On entering the chamber called conforteria, they assume the sack and cord, in which they appear to the prisoner as well as to the public. They divide between them the pious labors. Two perform the office of consolers; one acts as the sagrestano; and another makes a record of all that happens from the moment of the intimation of the sentence to that of the execution. These dismal annals are carefully preserved.

3. At midnight, the guardians of the prison go to the cell of the condemned, and lead him, by a staircase, to the chapel of the conforteria. At the foot of the stairs, the condemned is met by the notary, who formally intimates to him the sentence of death. The unhappy man is then delivered up to the two "comforters," who embrace him, and, with the crucifix and the image of the Sorrowful Mother presented to him, offer all the consolation which religion and charity can suggest in that terrible moment. The others assist in alleviating his misery, and, without being importunate, endeavor to dispose him to confess, and receive the Holy Communion.

4. Should he be ignorant of the truths of Christianity, they instruct him in them in a simple manner. If the condemned manifest a disposition to impenitence, they not only themselves use every effort which the circumstances of his case render necessary, but call in the aid of other clergymen. The other members of the confraternity employ the hours preceding the execution in the recital of appropriate prayers, and confess and communicate at a mass celebrated two hours before dawn.

5. Clad in the sacco, they proceed, two by two, to the prison, the procession being headed by a cross-bearer with a great cross, and a torch-bearer at each side, carrying a torch of yellow wax. The procession having arrived at the prison, the condemned descends the steps; the first object which meets his gaze being an image of the Blessed Virgin, before which he kneels, and, proceeding on, does the same before the crucifix, which is near the gate that he now leaves forever. Here he ascends the car which awaits him, accompanied by the "comforters," who console and assist him to the last; and the procession moves on to the place of execution, the members of the confraternity going in advance.

6. Arrived at the fatal spot, the condemned descends from the car, and is led into a chamber of an adjoining building, which is hung with black, where the last acts of devotion are performed, or, if he be impenitent, where the last efforts are made to move him to a better spirit. The hour being come, the executioner bandages his eyes, and places him upon the block; and thus, while supported by his confortori, and repeating the sacred name and invoking the mercy of Jesus, the axe descends upon the criminal, and human justice is satisfied. The brothers then take charge of the body, lay it on a bier, and, carrying it to their church, decently inter it. Finally, they conclude their pious work by prayer.

103. THE CONFRATERNITY "DELLA MORTE."

MAGUIRE.

1. FREQUENTLY, towards night, does the stranger in Rome hear in the streets the sad chant of the Miserere; and on approaching the place whence the solemn sounds proceed, he beholds a long procession of figures clad entirely in black, and headed by a cross-bearer; many of the figures bearing large waxen torches, which fling a wild glare upon the bier, on which is borne the body of the deceased. It is the Confraternity della Morte, dedicated to the pious office of providing burial for the poor. It was first instituted in 1551, and finally established by Pius IV. in 1560.

2. It is composed mostly of citizens of good position, some of whom are of high rank. The members are distinguished by a habit of black, and a hood of the same color, with apertures for the eyes. When they hear of a death, they meet, and having put on their habits, go out in pairs; and when they arrive at the house where the body lies, they place it on a bier, and take it to a church, singing the Miserere as the mournful procession winds through the streets.

3. Even should they be apprised of a death which had occurred twenty, or even thirty, miles distant from Rome, no matter what may be the time or the season, the burial of their poor fellow-creature is at once attended by this excellent society. In the Pontificate of Clement VIII., a terrible inundation was caused by the rise of the Tiber—a calamity ever to be dreaded, and ever attended with the greatest misery and danger to the poor—and the brethren were seen employed, as far as Ostia and Fiumicino, in extricating dead bodies from the water.

4. Another confraternity—della Perseveranza—which is composed of pious men, visit and relieve poor strangers who are domiciled in inns and lodging-houses; and minister to their different wants. This confraternity was established under Alexander VII., in 1663; and besides its duty of ministering to the necessities of the living, it also provides decent sepulture for the dead—poor strangers being in both cases the objects of their special care.

5. A fatal accident, which occurred near Tivoli, in September, 1856, afforded a melancholy occasion for the exercise of the charity of one of those institutions, and severely tested the humanity and courage of its brotherhood. An Irish clergyman, whose name it is not necessary to mention, was unfortunately drowned while bathing in the sulphur lake below Tivoli. After three days, the body was recovered; but it was found to be in an advanced state of decomposition, in a great measure owing to the highly impregnated character of the water.

6. The members of the confraternity della Morte, established in the church of the Carita, in Tivoli, laid the body in coffin, which they had provided for the purpose; and though the day was intensely hot, and the odor from the body was to the highest degree offensive, they bore it, for a distance of five miles, to the cathedral, where, after the last offices of religion being paid to it, it was buried in the grave set apart for the deceased canons of the church.

7. Here were a number of men, the majority of them artisans, encountering this fearful danger, and undergoing this perilous toil, beneath the raging heat of an Italian sun; not only without hope of fee or reward, but freely sacrificing their day's employment to the performance of a pious work. The number of the brethren to whom this duty was allotted was twenty-four; and they relieved each other by turns—those not engaged in bearing the body chanting sacred hymns, the dirge-like tones of which fall upon the ear of the stranger with such solemn effect.

104. LAMENT OF MARY, QUEEN OF SCOTS.

BURNS.

ROBERT BURNS was born in Scotland in 1758 ; died in 1796. In poetic genius he has been surpassed by few in any age. Born of the people he sang of the people, and his songs are the genuine expression of Scottish feeling ; hence it is that his name is identified with the Scottish nation.

1. Now nature hangs her mantle green
On every blooming tree,
And spreads her sheets o' daisies white
Out o'er the grassy lea ;
Now Phœbus cheers the crystal streams,
And glads the azure skies ;
But naught can glad the weary wight
That fast in durance lies.

2. Now lav'rocks wake the merry morn,
Aloft on dewy wing ;
The merle, in his noontide bower,
Makes woodland-echoes ring ;
The mavis wild, wi' many a note,
Sings drowsy day to rest ;
In love and freedom they rejoice,
Wi' care nor thrall opprest.

3. Now blooms the lily by the bank,
The primrose down the brae ;
The hawthorn's budding in the glen,
And milk-white is the slae ;
The meanest hind in fair Scotland
May rove their sweets among ;
But I, the queen of a' Scotland,
Maun lie in prison strong.

4. I was the queen o' bonnie France,
Where happy I hae been ;
Full lightly rose I in the morn,
As blithe lay down at e'en ;
And I'm the sovereign o' Scotland,
And mony a traitor there ;
Yet here I lie, in foreign bands,
And never-ending care.
5. But as for thee, thou false woman,¹
My sister and my foe !
Grim vengeance, yet, shall whet a sword
That through thy soul shall go ;
The weeping blood in woman's breast
Was never known to thee ;
Nor the balm that drops on wounds of woe
Frae woman's pitying e'e.
6. My son !² my son ! may kinder stars
Upon thy fortune shine ;
And may those pleasures gild thy reign
That ne'er wad blink on mine !
God keep thee frae thy mother's foes,
Or turn their hearts to thee ;
And where thou meet'st thy mother's friend,
Remember him for me !
7. Oh, soon, to me, may summer suns
Nae mair light up the morn !
Nae mair, to me, the autumn winds
Wave o'er the yellow corn !
And in the narrow house of death
Let winter round me rave ;
And the next flowers that deck the spring
Bloom on my peaceful grave.

Elizabeth, queen of England, who unjustly detained her in prison.
James the First, king of England.

105. THE PLAGUE OF LOCUSTS.

FROM NEWMAN'S "CALLISTA."

1. THE plague of locusts, one of the most awful visitations to which the countries included in the Roman Empire were exposed, extended from the Atlantic to Ethiopia, from Arabia to India, and from the Nile and Red Sea to Greece and the north of Asia Minor. Instances are recorded in history of clouds of the devastating insect crossing the Black Sea to Poland, and the Mediterranean to Lombardy. It is as numerous in its species as it is wide in its range of territory. Brood follows brood, with a sort of family likeness, yet with distinct attributes, as we read in the prophets of the Old Testament, from whom Bochart tells us it is possible to enumerate as many as ten kinds.

2. It wakens into existence and activity as early as the month of March; but instances are not wanting, as in our present history, of its appearance as late as June. Even one flight comprises myriads upon myriads, passing imagination, to which the drops of rain, or the sands of the sea, are the only fit comparisons; and hence it is almost a proverbial mode of expression in the East (as may be illustrated by the sacred pages to which we just now referred), by way of describing a vast invading army, to liken it to the locusts. So dense are they, when upon the wing, that it is no exaggeration to say that they hide the sun, from which circumstance, indeed, their name in Arabic is derived. And so ubiquitous are they when they have alighted on the earth, that they simply cover or clothe its surface.

3. This last characteristic is stated in the sacred account of the plagues of Egypt, where their faculty of devastation is also mentioned. The corrupting fly and the bruising and prostrating hail preceded them in the series of visitations, but they came to do the work of ruin thoroughly. For not only the crops and fruits, but the foliage of the forest itself, nay, the small twigs and the bark of the trees, are the victims of their curious and energetic rapacity. They have been known even to gnaw the door-posts of the houses. Nor do the execute their task in so slovenly a way, that, as they have succeeded other plagues, so they may have successors themselves.

4. They take pains to spoil what they leave. Like the harpies, they smear every thing that they touch with a miserable slime, which has the effect of a virus in corroding, or, as some say, in scorching and burning. And then, perhaps, as if all this were too little, when they can do nothing else, they die, as if out of sheer malevolence to man, for the poisonous elements of their nature are then let loose and dispersed abroad, and create a pestilence; and they manage to destroy many more by their death than in their life.

5. Such are the locusts,—whose existence the ancient heretics brought forward as their primary proof that there was an evil creator; and of whom an Arabian writer shows his national horror, when he says that they have the head of a horse, the eyes of an elephant, the neck of a bull, the horns of a stag, the breast of a lion, the belly of a scorpion, the wings of an eagle, the legs of a camel, the feet of an ostrich, and the tail of a serpent.

6. And now they are rushing upon a considerable tract of that beautiful region of which we have spoken with such admiration. The swarm to which Juba pointed, grew and grew, till it became a compact body, as much as a furlong square; yet it was but the vanguard of a series of similar hosts, formed, one after another, out of the hot mould or sand, rising into the air like clouds, enlarging into a dusky canopy, and then discharged against the fruitful plain. At length, the huge, innumerable mass was put into motion, and began its career, darkening the face of day.

7. As became an instrument of divine power, it seemed to have no volition of its own; it was set off, it drifted with the wind, and thus made northwards, straight for Sicca. Thus they advanced, host after host, for a time wafted on the air, and gradually declining to the earth, while fresh broods were carried over the first, and neared the earth, after a longer flight, in their turn. For twelve miles did they extend, from front to rear, and their whizzing and hissing could be heard for six miles on every side of them.

8. The bright sun, though hidden by them, illumined their bodies, and was reflected from their quivering wings; and as they heavily fell earthward, they seemed like the innumerable flakes of a yellow-colored snow. And like snow did they descend, a living carpet, or rather pall, upon fields, crops, gardens, copses, groves, orchards, vineyards, olive woods, orangeries, palm plantations, and the deep forests, sparing nothing within their reach, and, where there was nothing to devour, lying helpless in drifts, or crawling forward obstinately, as best they might, with the hope of prey.

9. They could spare their hundred thousand soldiers, twice or thrice over, and not miss them; their masses filled the bottoms of the ravines and hollow ways, impeding the traveller as he rode forward on his journey, and trampled by thousands under his horse's hoofs. In vain was all this overthrow and waste by the roadside; in vain their loss in river, pool, and water-course. The poor peasants hastily-dug pits and trenches as their enemy came on; in vain they filled them from the wells or with lighted stubble. Heavily and thickly did the locusts fall; they were lavish of their lives; they choked the flame and the water, which destroyed them the while, and the vast, living hostile armament still moved on.

106. THE PLAGUE OF LOCUSTS—continued.

1. THEY moved on like soldiers in their ranks, stopping at nothing, and straggling for nothing; they carried a broad furrow, or weal, all across the country, black and loathsome, while it was as green and smiling on each side of them, and in front, as it had been before they came. Before them, in the language of the prophets, was a paradise, and behind them a desert. They are daunted by nothing; they surmount walls and hedges, and enter inclosed gardens or inhabited houses.

2. A rare and experimental vineyard has been planted in a sheltered grove. The high winds of Africa will not commonly allow the light trellis or the slim pole; but here the lofty poplar of

Campania has been possible, on which the vine-plant mounts so many yards into the air, that the poor grape-gatherers bargain for a funeral pile and a tomb as one of the conditions of their engagement. The locusts have done what the winds and lightning could not do, and the whole promise of the vintage, leaves and all, is gone, and the slender stems are left bare.

3. There is another yard, less uncommon, but still tended with more than common care; each plant is kept within due bounds by a circular trench around it, and by upright canes on which it is to trail; in an hour the solicitude and long toil of the vine-dresser are lost, and his pride humbled. There is a smiling farm; another sort of vine, of remarkable character, is found against the farm-house. This vine springs from one root, and has clothed and matted with its many branches the four walls. The whole of it is covered thick with long clusters, which another month will ripen. On every grape and leaf there is a locust.

4. In the dry caves and pits, carefully strewed with straw, the harvest-men have (safely, as they thought just now) been stowing the far-famed African wheat. One grain or root shoots up into ten, twenty, fifty, eighty, nay, three or four hundred stalks; sometimes the stalks have two ears apiece, and these shoot off into a number of lesser ones. These stores are intended for the Roman populace; but the locusts have been beforehand with them. The small patches of ground belonging to the poor peasants up and down the country, for raising the turnips, garlic, barley, and water-melons, on which they live, are the prey of these glutton invaders as much as the choicest vines and olives.

5. Nor have they any reverence for the villa of the civic ecurion, or the Roman official. The neatly arranged kitchen-garden, with its cherries, plums, peaches, and apricots, is a waste; as the slaves sit around, in the kitchen in the first court, at their coarse evening meal, the room is filled with the invading force, and the news comes to them that the enemy has fallen upon the apples and pears, in the basement, and is at the same time plundering and sacking the preserves of quince and pomegranate, and revelling in the jars of precious oil of Cyprus and Mendes in the store-rooms.

6. They come up to the walls of Sicca, and are flung against them into the ditch. Not a moment's hesitation or delay; they recover their footing, they climb up the wood or stucco, they surmount the parapet, or they have entered in at the windows, filling the apartments, and the most private and luxurious chambers, not one or two, like stragglers at forage, or rioters after a victory, but in order of battle, and with the array of an army. Choice plants or flowers about the impluvium and xysti, for ornament or refreshment—myrtles, oranges, pomegranates, the rose, and the carnation—have disappeared.

7. They dim the bright marbles of the walls and the gilding of the ceiling. They enter the triclinium in the midst of the banquet; they crawl over the viands, and spoil what they do not devour. Unrelaxed by success and by enjoyment, onward they go; a secret, mysterious instinct keeps them together, as if they had a king over them. They move along the floor in so strange an order that they seem to be a tessellated pavement themselves, and to be the artificial embellishment of the place, so true are their lines, and so perfect is the pattern they describe.

8. Onward they go, to the market, to the temple sacrifice to bakers' stores, to the cook-shops, to the confectioners, to the druggists; nothing comes amiss to them; wherever man has aught to eat or drink there are they, reckless of death, strong of appetite, certain of conquest.

They have passed on; the men of Sicca sadly congratulate themselves, and begin to look about them and to sum up the losses. Being the proprietors of the neighboring districts, and the purchasers of its produce, they lament over the devastation, not because the fair country is disfigured, but because income is becoming scanty, and prices are becoming high.

9. How is a population of many thousands to be fed? Where is the grain? where the melons, the figs, the dates, the gourds, the beans, the grapes, to sustain and solace the multitudes in their lanes, caverns, and garrets? This is another weighty consideration for the class well-to-do in the world.

The taxes, too, and contributions, the capitation tax, the percentage upon corn, the various articles of revenue due to Rome, how are they to be paid? How are the cattle to be provided for the sacrifices and the tables of the wealthy? One-half, at least, of the supply of Sicca is cut off.

10. No longer slaves are seen coming into the city from the country in troops, with their baskets on their shoulders, or beating forward the horse, or mule, or ox overladen with its burden, or driving in the dangerous cow or the unresisting sheep. The animation of the place is gone; a gloom hangs over the Forum, and if its frequenters are still merry there is something of sullenness and recklessness in their mirth. The gods have given the city up; something or other has angered them. Locusts, indeed, are no uncommon visitation, but at an earlier season. Perhaps some temple has been polluted, or some unholy rite practised, or some secret conspiracy has spread.

11. Another, and a still worse, calamity. The invaders, as we have already hinted, could be more terrible still in their overthrow than in their ravages. The inhabitants of the country had attempted, where they could, to destroy them by fire and water. It would seem as if the malignant animals had resolved that the sufferers should have the benefit of this policy to the full, for they had not got more than twenty miles beyond Sicca when they suddenly sickened and died. When they thus had done all the mischief they could by their living, when they thus had made their foul maws the grave of every living thing, next they died themselves and made the desolated land their own grave. They took from it its hundred forms and varieties of beautiful life, and left it their own fetid and poisonous carcasses in payment.

12. It was a sudden catastrophe; they seemed making for the Mediterranean, as if, like other great conquerors, they had other worlds to subdue beyond it; but, whether they were over-gorged, or struck by some atmospheric change, or that their time was come and they paid the debt of nature, so it was that suddenly they fell, and their glory came to naught, and all was vanity to them as to others, and "their stench rose up, and their corruption rose up, because they had done proudly."

13. The hideous swarms lay dead in the most steaming underwood, in the green swamps, in the sheltered valleys, in the ditches and furrows of the fields, amid the monuments of their own prowess, the ruined crops and the dishonored vineyards. A poisonous element, issuing from their remains, mingled with the atmosphere and corrupted it. The dismayed peasants found that a plague had begun; a new visitation, not confined to the territory which the enemy had made its own, but extending far and wide as the atmosphere extends in all directions. Their daily toil, no longer claimed by the fruits of the earth, which have ceased to exist, is now devoted to the object of ridding themselves of the deadly legacy which they have received in their stead.

14. In vain; it is their last toil; they are digging pits, they are raising piles, for their own corpses, as well as for the bodies of their enemies. Invader and victim lie in the same grave, burn in the same heap; they sicken while they work, and the pestilence spreads. A new invasion is menacing Sicca, in the shape of companies of peasants and slaves, with their employers and overseers, nay, the farmers themselves and proprietors, the panic having broken the bonds of discipline, rushing from famine and infection as to a place of safety. The inhabitants of the city are as frightened as they, and more energetic. They determine to keep them at a distance; the gates are closed; a strict cordon is drawn; however, by the continual pressure, numbers contrive to make an entrance, as water into a vessel, or light through the closed shutters, and any how the air cannot be put in quarantine, so the pestilence has the better of it and at last appears in the alleys and in the cellars of Sicca.

107. AN HOUR AT THE OLD PLAY-GROUND.

A N O N .

1. I SAT an hour to-day, John,
Beside the old brook stream;
Where we were school-boys in old times,
When manhood was a dream;
The brook is choked with falling leaves,
The pond is dried away,
I scarce believe that you would know
The dear old place to-day!
2. The school-house is no more, John ;
Beneath our locust-trees,
The wild-rose by the window side
No more waves in the breeze ;
The scatter'd stones look desolate,
The sod they rested on
Has been plough'd up by stranger hands,
Since you and I were gone.
- 3 The chestnut-tree is dead, John,
And what is sadder now,
The broken grape-vine of our swing,
Hangs on the wither'd bough;
I read our names upon the bark,
And found the pebbles rare,
Laid up beneath the hollow side,
As we had piled them there.
4. Beneath the grass-grown bank, John,
I look'd for our old spring,
That bubbled down the alder path,
Three paces from the swing ;
The rushes grow upon the brink,
The pool is black and bare,
And not a foot, this many a day,
It seems, has trodden there.

5. I took the old blind road, John,
 That wander'd up the hill,
 'Tis darker than it used to be,
 And seems so lone and still;
 The birds sing yet upon the boughs,
 Where once the sweet grapes hung,
 But not a voice of human kind,
 Where all our voices rung.
6. I sat me on the fence, John,
 That lies as in old time,
 The same half pannel in the path,
 We used so oft to climb;
 And thought how o'er the bars of life
 Our playmates had pass'd on,
 And left me counting on the spot,
 The faces that are gone.
-

108. CHRISTIAN AND PAGAN ROME.

DR. NELIGAN.

REV. WILLIAM H. NELIGAN, LL. D., was born in Clonmel, County Tipperary, Ireland. Formerly a minister of the Church of England—became a convert in 1853; studied in Rome, and was ordained priest in New York by Archbishop Hughes in 1857. His work on "Rome, its churches, &c.," gives a striking and correct picture of the Eternal City. He has also written an edifying work entitled "Saintly Characters," with others of less note.

1. ROME is a city of contrasts. Like Rebecca, she bears within her two worlds opposed to each other. It is agreeable to pass from one to the other. Having spent the morning in Christian Rome, we would now take a glimpse at ancient Rome. This makes the chief happiness of the pilgrim. It seems to multiply his existence. We sat down on the eastern part of the Palatine Hill, as the sun was casting his declining rays on the scene before us.

2. This seems to me to be a place which Jeremias would select, to meditate on the ruins of the city. Seated upon the dust of the palace of Nero and Augustus, he could have uttered one of his plaintive meditations on the ruins of departed greatness. Soon would it change its tone to one of triumphant rejoicing, as he thought how the city of Nero became the city of Peter, the Prince of the Apostles, and that "the glory of this last city should be more than that of the first." Before you, are the arch of Titus, the Coliseum, and the arch of Constantine, which form a triangle, and which were built on the boundaries of the ancient and the Christian world, when Paganism and Judaism were disputing with the rising church the empire of mankind.

3. The arch of Titus, by its inscription on both sides, recalls to us the prophecy of Daniel and the prophecy of Christ, with respect to the destruction of the city, and shows to all generations the effect of these words, "His blood be upon us and upon our children." The second is the Coliseum, a witness of the degradation of humanity at the era of Christianity, of the struggle of paganism, and of the cruelty which she exercised against the Church. It is also a witness of the victory of the weak over the strong, and of the suffering victims over those who persecuted them. This was the battle-field where the martyrs were crowned. In this amphitheatre, erected by the hands of Jews and pagans, the most glorious triumphs of Christianity were gained. But the scene draws to a close.

4. The arch of Constantine is the witness of the conquest of Catholicity over the territory through which paganism reigned. It was erected to the "liberator of the city, and to the founder of peace." These the finger of God seems to have kept in such a state of preservation, to be his witnesses to the end of all ages. Viewed by the eye of Christian philosophy, the ruins of the Eternal City speak with a wondrous eloquence. Where God and man meet; Christianity the conqueror, and paganism the conquered, are present everywhere. As the work of man, the city presents to us the ruins of temples, of palaces, aqueducts, and mutilated mausoleums—all mingled together in the dust; as the work of God, the city of St. Peter and of Pio Nono is always radiant with youth.

5. The cross has crowned the Capitol for a longer period than the imperial eagle. Everywhere you see a privileged ruin of paganism coming to shelter itself under the wing of religion, to escape from utter destruction. Like captives, who find any conditions acceptable, should their lives be spared, the old glories of Rome have submitted themselves to any use that may be made of them. They have become Christian temples, tombs of martyrs, columns, pedestals, and even the pavement in the houses of the victors. They are satisfied if the daughter of heaven deign to touch them with her finger. It is to them an assurance of immortality. They seem to remember the treatment which they received from the hands of the barbarians, and, to escape fresh ravages, they are desirous of being adopted by that poor church, whose blood they drank in the day of their glory.

6. How often is the Catholic pilgrim delighted with these obelisks, which were formerly erected to some of the great men of the world! At their base you find inscribed the name of the hero to whom they were erected; above this, the name of the Pontiff, the successor of the fisherman of Galilee, who dedicated them to St. Peter, St. Paul, or the Mother of God, and placed their statues on the summit of the pillar. Here both history and poetry seem united together. This aspect of defeat and victory, which is to be met with at every step in the Eternal City, affords much instruction.

7. It is to the serious mind a lesson which makes him despise all that is of earth, and admire all that is from God. With feelings like these, the traveller, the artist, and the pilgrim behold all these monuments of antiquity, and if they be the means of detaching him from all that is changing around him, and of uniting him to the things which change not, he may indeed say he has seen Rome.

109. ROSEMARY IN THE SCULPTOR'S STUDIO.

HUNTINGTON.

J. V. HUNTINGTON, born in New York in 1815, formerly an Episcopalian minister; since his conversion to Catholicity entirely devoted to literary pursuits. He is best known as a novelist, but has published a volume of poetry and a good many fugitive pieces. His novels indicate an intimate acquaintance with the better and more cultivated portion of American society. His novel of "Rosemary" is a work of considerable dramatic power, colored with the warm tints of a poet's fancy. His "Pretty Plate" is one of the best juvenile stories with which we are acquainted.

1. ROSEMARY sat with her back to the countess, and her face to the old brilliant picture of the glorious Coming, with its angels in sky-blue robes and saints with gilded halos.

"A very interesting picture," Rory said.

"Very! I can hardly take my eyes off from it."

"Very well, as you must look at some point in particular, suppose that you look at that picture."

"Is the position in which I sit of any consequence?"

"As long as you do not lean back, and continue to look at the picture, it is of no consequence. You may change it whenever you like. Be quite unconstrained in that respect."

"I am glad you allow me to sit. I supposed the sitting would be a standing."

"Not to-day. Another time I may try your patience further."

2. While Rosemary sat thus, her eyes fastened on the picture, and scarcely seeing O'Morra, who stood near his pile of clay, working it with an instrument into shape, he conversed with her in a tranquil tone. She was pleased though surprised at this, for from the rigid silence he had imposed on the countess, she had counted on more than usual taciturnity on his part. First, he gave her a history of the picture, painted by a monk in the fifteenth century. Thence he naturally passed to the subject of which it treated.

3. All representations of so great a theme, the crowning event of human history, but lying beyond the domain of human experience, were unsatisfactory. Rosemary thought so too. Insensibly he diverged to the mighty scene itself. His language, remarkably calm and unexcited, but admirably chosen, became soon the outline of a meditation on the Final Judgment. Circumstance after circumstance taken from Holy Writ came in to heighten the tremendous word-picture, and in the midst of the scene Rosemary and himself were placed as assistants and spectators.

4. "We may suppose that our purgation will not have ceased before, as it will certainly cease then. What feelings must be ours, in such a case, when we shall have burst the prison of the tomb, to behold the tomb itself, the solid earth, crumble and melt, and yet feel in our own risen bodies the throb of eternal life! What a moment! the wedding again of the flesh and spirit instantaneously co-glorified; a fact of which we shall take note with perfect intellectual clearness, even in the same instant that the Beatific Vision breaks upon us with its infinite vistas of entrancing splendor!"

5. Rosemary's beautiful face kindled like a vase lighted from within; she leaned a little forward and raised one fair arm towards the old picture, as if she would have spoken.

"The resurrection of the flesh, its glorification, its divination almost, is to me one of the most consoling dogmas of our faith. That body is immortal already in my opinion; it shall breathe and pulsate, shall see and hear, have motion and force and splendor, while God shall be God. What is the grave? You have lain in it once, yet now you live! What has happened to you in a figure shall happen to us all in reality. You ought to feel this vividly—you, once the motionless tenant of a tomb!"

6. From that time O'Morra worked on in silence. At last Rosemary timidly glanced at him—for she was weary. He was not looking at her at all; his bright eye was fixed on vacancy, and his fingers worked, like a blind man's, in the plastic clay. It was a rude human figure, feminine vaguely, nude, black, dripping wet; in the body the posture was nearly all that was evident, and that was roughly outlined; the head was massively brought out, and under the clay hair, clotted and lumped, was a noble face, upturned to heaven with an expression of wonder, awe, joy, and earnest gazing, as upon some marvellous glory.

110. STELLA MATUTINA, ORA PRO NOBIS.¹

HUNTINGTON.

1. GLEAMING o'er mountain, coast, and wave,
What splendor It, foretokening, gave
The front of shadow-chasing morn !
And, ere the day-star was re-born,
With borrow'd but auspicious light
Gladden'd the night-long watcher's sight !
2. Fair herald of a brighter sun,
And pledge of Heaven's own day begun,
When th' ancient world's long night was o'er,
So shone, above death's dreaded shore,
And life's now ever-brightening sea,
The lowly MAID of GALILEE.
3. Lost now in His effulgent ray,
Bathed in the brightness of His day,
O Morning Star ! still sweetly shine
Through that dim night which yet is mine ;
Precede for me His dawning light,
Who only puts all shades to flight !

111. RELIGIOUS ORDERS.

LEIBNITZ.

WM. G. LEIBNITZ was born in Leipsic in 1646; died in 1716. His scientific and philosophical attainments entitle him to be placed among the highest mathematicians and philosophers of the age.

1. SINCE the glory of God and the happiness of our fellow-creatures may be promoted by various means, by command or by example, according to the condition and disposition of each, the advantages of that institution are manifest by which, besides those who are engaged in active and every-day life, there are also found in the Church ascetic and contemplative men, who, abandoning the cares of life, and trampling its pleasures under foot, devote their whole being to the contemplation of the Deity, and the admiration of his works ; or who, freed from personal concerns, apply themselves exclusively to watch and relieve the necessities of others ; some by instructing the ignorant or erring ; some by assisting the needy and afflicted.

¹ Stella Matutina, ora pro nobis. Morning Star, pray for us ;—one of the suffrages in the Litany of Loretto.

2. Nor is it the least among those marks which commend to us that Church, which alone has preserved the name and the badges of Catholicity, that we see her alone produce and cherish these illustrious examples of the eminent virtues and of the ascetic life.

Wherefore, I confess, that I have ardently admired the religious orders, and the pious confraternities, and the other similar admirable institutions ; for they are a sort of celestial soldiery upon earth, provided, corruptions and abuses being removed, they are governed according to the institutes of the founders, and regulated by the supreme Pontiff for the use of the universal Church.

3. For what can be more glorious than to carry the light of truth to distant nations, through seas and fires and sword—to traffic in the salvation of souls alone,—to forego the allurements of pleasure, and even the enjoyment of conversation and of social intercourse, in order to pursue, undisturbed the contemplation of abstruse truths and divine meditation,—to dedicate one's self to the education of youth in science and in virtue,—to assist and console the wretched, the despairing, the lost, the captive, the condemned, the sick,—in squalor in chains, in distant lands,—undeterred even by the fear of pestilence from the lavish exercise of these heavenly offices of charity !

4. The man who knows not, or despises these things, has but a vulgar and plebeian conception of virtue ; he foolishly measures the obligations of men towards their God by the perfunctory discharge of ordinary duties, and by the frozen habit of life, devoid of zeal, and even of soul, which prevails commonly among men. For it is not a counsel, as some persuade themselves, but a strict precept, to labor with every power of soul and body, no matter in what condition of life we may be, for the attainment of Christian perfection, with which neither wedlock, nor children, nor public office, are incompatible (although they throw difficulties in the way); but it is only a counsel to select that state of life which is more free from earthly obstacles, upon which selection our Lord congratulated Magdalen.

112. "MY FATHER'S GROWING OLD."

ELIZABETH G. BARBER.

1. My father's growing old; his eye
Looks dimly on the page;
The locks that round his forehead lie
Are silver'd o'er by age;
My heart has learn'd too well the tale
Which other lips have told,
His years and strength begin to fail—
"My father's growing old."
2. They tell me, in my youthful years
He led me by his side,
And strove to calm my childish fears,
My erring steps to guide.
But years, with all their scenes of change,
Above us both have roll'd,
I now must guide his faltering steps—
"My father's growing old."
3. When sunset's rosy glow departs,
With voices full of mirth.
Our household band with joyous hearts
Will gather round the hearth,

They look upon his trembling form,
His pallid face behold,
And turn away with chasten'd tones—
“My father's growing old.”

4. And when each tuneful voice we raise,
In songs of “long ago,”
His voice which mingles in our lays
Is tremulous and low.
It used to seem a clarion's tone,
So musical and bold,
But weaker, fainter has it grown—
“My father's growing old.”

5. The same fond smile he used to wear
Still wreathes his pale lips now,
But Time with lines of age and care
Has traced his placid brow.
But yet amid the lapse of years
His heart has not grown cold,
Though voice and footsteps plainly tell—
“My father's growing old.”

6. My father! thou did'st strive to share
My joys and calm my fears,
And now thy child, with grateful care,
In thy declining years
Shall smooth thy path, and brighter scenes
By faith and hope unfold;
And love thee with a holier love
Since thou art “growing old.”

13. CHARLES V., EMPEROR OF GERMANY, RESIGNS HIS DOMINIONS AND RETIRES FROM THE WORLD.

ROBERTSON.

DR. WILLIAM ROBERTSON, born in 1721, at Borthwich, Mid Lothian, Scotland; died 1798. His principal works are the "History of Charles the Fifth," "History of America," and "History of Scotland." As an historian, Robertson is remarkable for grace and elegance of style, although some of his works are disfigured by a partisan bias.

1. THIS great emperor, in the plenitude of his power, and in possession of all the honors which can flatter the heart of man, took the extraordinary resolution to resign his kingdoms; and to withdraw entirely from any concern in business or the affairs of this world, in order that he might spend the remainder of his days in retirement and solitude.

2. Though it requires neither deep reflection, nor extraordinary discernment, to discover that the state of royalty is not exempt from cares and disappointments; though most of those who are exalted to a throne, find solicitude, and satiety, and disgust, to be their perpetual attendants, in that envied pre-eminence; yet, to descend voluntarily from the supreme to a subordinate station, and to relinquish the possession of power in order to attain the enjoyment of happiness, seems to be an effort too great for the human mind.

3. Several instances, indeed, occur in history, of monarchs who have quitted a throne, and have ended their days in retirement. But they were either weak princes, who took this resolution rashly, and repented of it as soon as it was taken; or unfortunate princes, from whose hands some strong rival had wrested their sceptre, and compelled them to descend with reluctance into a private station.

4. Diocletian is, perhaps, the only prince capable of holding the reins of government, who ever resigned them from deliberate choice; and who continued, during many years, to enjoy the tranquillity of retirement, without fetching one penitent sigh, or casting back one look of desire towards the power or dignity which he had abandoned.

5. No wonder, then, that Charles's resignation should fill all Europe with astonishment, and give rise, both among his contemporaries and among the historians of that period, to various conjectures concerning the motives which determined a prince, whose ruling passion had been uniformly the love of power, at the age of fifty-six, when objects of ambition operate with full force on the mind, and are pursued with the greatest ardor, to take a resolution so singular and unexpected.

6. The Emperor, in pursuance of his determination, having assembled the states of the Low Countries at Brussels, seated himself, for the last time, in the chair of state; on one side of which was placed his son, and on the other, his sister the queen of Hungary, regent of the Netherlands, with a splendid retinue of the grandees of Spain, and princes of the empire standing behind him.

7. The president of the council of Flanders, by his command, explained in a few words, his intention in calling this extraordinary meeting of the state. He then read the instrument of resignation, by which Charles surrendered to his son Philip all his territories, jurisdiction, and authority in the Low Countries; absolving his subjects there from their oath of allegiance to him, which he required them to transfer to Philip his lawful heir; and to serve him with the same loyalty and zeal that they had manifested, during so long a course of years, in support of his government.

8. Charles then rose from his seat, and leaning on the shoulder of the Prince of Orange, because he was unable to stand without support, he addressed himself to the audience, and, from a paper which he held in his hand, in order to assist his memory, he recounted, with dignity, but without ostentation, all the great things which he had undertaken and performed, since the commencement of his administration.

9. He observed, that from the seventeenth year of his age he had dedicated all his thoughts and attention to public objects, reserving no portion of his time for the indulgence of his ease, and very little for the enjoyment of private pleasure; that either in a pacific or hostile manner, he had visited Germany nine times, Spain six times, France four times, Italy of even times, the Low Countries ten times, England twice, Africa as often, and had made eleven voyages by sea.

10. That while his health permitted him to discharge his duty, and the vigor of his constitution was equal in any degree to the arduous office of governing dominions so extensive, he had never shunned labor nor repined under fatigue ; that now, when his health was broken, and his vigor exhausted by the rage of an incurable distemper, his growing infirmities admonished him to retire ;

11. Nor was he so fond of reigning, as to retain the sceptre in an impotent hand, which was no longer able to protect his subjects, or to render them happy ; that instead of a sovereign worn out with diseases, and scarcely half alive, he gave them one in the prime of life, accustomed already to govern, and who added to the vigor of youth all the attention and sagacity of maturer years ;

12. That if, during the course of a long administration, he had committed any material error in government ; or if, under the pressure of so many and great affairs, and amid the attention which he had been obliged to give to them, he had either neglected or injured any of his subjects, he now implored their forgiveness ;

13. That, for his part, he should ever retain a grateful sense of their fidelity and attachment, and would carry the remembrance of it along with him to the place of his retreat, as his sweetest consolation, as well as the best reward for all his services ; and in his last prayers to Almighty God, would pour forth his ardent wishes for their welfare.

14. Then turning towards Philip, who fell on his knees and kissed his father's hand, "If," says he, "I had left you, by my death, this rich inheritance, to which I have made such large additions, some regard would have been justly due to my memory on that account ; but now, when I voluntarily resign to you what I might have still retained, I may well expect the warmest expression of thanks on your part.

15. "With these, however, I dispense ; and shall consider your concern for the welfare of your subjects, and your love for them, as the best and most acceptable testimony of your gratitude to me. It is in your power, by a wise and virtuous administration, to justify the extraordinary proof which I give this day of my paternal affection, and to demonstrate that you are worthy of the confidence which I repose in you.

16. "Preserve an inviolable regard for religion ; maintain the Catholic faith in its purity ; let the laws of your country be sacred in your eyes ; encroach not on the rights and privileges of your people ; and if the time shall ever come when you shall wish to enjoy the tranquillity of private life, may you have a son endowed with such qualities that you can resign your sceptre to him with as much satisfaction as I give up mine to you."

17. As soon as Charles had finished this long address to his subjects, and to their new sovereign, he sunk into the chair exhausted and ready to faint with the fatigue of so extraordinary an effort. During his discourse, the whole audience melted into tears ; some from admiration of his magnanimity ; others softened by the expressions of tenderness towards his son, and of love to his people ; and all were affected with the deepest sorrow, at losing a sovereign who had distinguished the Netherlands, his native country, with particular marks of his regard and attachment.

114. RESIGNATION OF CHARLES V.—continued.

1. A FEW weeks after the resignation of the Netherlands, Charles, in an assembly no less splendid and with a ceremonial equally pompous, resigned to his son the crowns of Spain, with all the territories depending on them, both in the old and in the new world. Of all these vast possessions, he reserved nothing for himself, but an annual pension of a hundred thousand crowns, to defray the charges of his family, and to afford him a small sum for acts of beneficence and charity.

2. Nothing now remained to detain him from that retreat for which he languished. Every thing having been prepared sometime for his voyage, he set out for Zuithburg in Zealand where the fleet had orders to rendezvous.

3. In his way thither, he passed through Ghent : and after stopping there a few days, to indulge that tender and pleasing melancholy, which arises in the mind of every man in the decline of life, on visiting the place of his nativity, and viewing the scenes and objects familiar to him in his early youth, he resumed his journey, accompanied by his son Philip, his daughter the archduchess, his sisters the dowager queens of France and Hungary, Maximilian his son-in-law, and a numerous retinue of the Flemish nobility.

4. Before he went on board, he dismissed them, with marks of his attention or regard ; and taking leave of Philip with all the tenderness of a father who embraced his son for the last time, he set sail under convoy of a large fleet of Spanish, Flemish, and English ships.

5. His voyage was prosperous, and agreeable ; and he arrived at Laredo in Biscay, on the eleventh day after he left England. As soon as he landed, he fell prostrate on the ground ; and considering himself now as dead to the world, he kissed the earth, and said, " Naked came I out of my mother's womb, and naked I now return to thee, thou common mother of mankind."

6. From Laredo he proceeded to Valladolid. There he took a last and tender leave of his two sisters ; whom he would not permit to accompany him to his solitude, though they entreated it with tears : not only that they might have the consolation of contributing, by their attendance and care, to alleviate or to soothe his sufferings, but that they might reap instruction and benefit, by joining with him in those pious exercises, to which he had consecrated the remainder of his days.

7. From Valladolid, he continued his journey to Plazencia in Castile. He had passed through that city a great many years before ; and having been struck at that time with the sightful situation of the monastery of St. Justus, belonging to the order of St. Jerome, not many miles distant from that place, he had then observed to some of his attendants, that it was a spot to which Diocletian might have retired with security.

8. The impression had remained so strong on his mind, that he pitched upon it as the place of his retreat. It was seated in a vale of no great extent, watered by a small brook, and surrounded by rising grounds, covered with lofty trees. From the nature of the soil, as well as the temperature of the climate, it was esteemed the most healthful and delicious situation in Spain.

9. Some months before his resignation, he had sent an architect thither, to add a new apartment to the monastery, for his accommodation ; but he gave strict orders that the style of the building should be such as suited his present station rather than his former dignity. It consisted only of six rooms, four of them in the form of friars' cells, with naked walls ; the other two, each twenty feet square, were hung with brown cloth, and furnished in the most simple manner.

10. They were all on a level with the ground ; with a door on one side into a garden, of which Charles himself had given the plan, and had filled it with various plants, which he proposed to cultivate with his own hands. On the other side they communicated with the chapel of the monastery, in which he was to perform his devotions.

11. Into this humble retreat, hardly sufficient for the comfortable accommodation of a private gentleman, did Charles enter with twelve domestics only. He buried there, in solitude and silence, his grandeur, his ambition, together with those vast projects, which, during half a century, had alarmed and agitated Europe ; filling every kingdom in it, by turns with the terror of his arms, and the dread of being subject to his power.

12. In this retirement, Charles formed such a plan of life for himself, as would have suited the condition of a private person of a moderate fortune. His table was neat but plain ; his domestics few ; his intercourse with them familiar ; all the cumbersome and ceremonious forms of attendance on his person were entirely abolished, as destructive of that social ease and tranquillity which he courted, in order to soothe the remainder of his days.

13. As the mildness of the climate, together with his deerance from the burdens and cares of government, procured him, at first, a considerable remission from the acute pains with which he had been long tormented ; he enjoyed, perhaps, more complete satisfaction in this humble solitude, than all his grandeur had ever yielded him.

14. The ambitious thoughts and projects which had so long engrossed and disquieted him, were quite effaced from his mind. Far from taking any part in the political transactions of the princes of Europe, he restrained his curiosity even from any inquiry concerning them ; and he seemed to view the busy scene which he had abandoned, with all the contempt and indifference arising from his thorough experience of its vanity, as well as from the pleasing reflection of having disentangled himself from its cares.

115. LETTER FROM PLINY TO MARCELLINUS.

MELMOTH.

1. I WRITE this under the utmost oppression of sorrow. The youngest daughter of my friend Fundanus is dead ! Never surely was there a more agreeable, and more amiable young person ; or one who better deserved to have enjoyed a long, I had almost said, an immortal life ! She had all the wisdom of age, and discretion of a matron, joined with youthful sweetness and virgin modesty.

2. With what an engaging fondness did she behave to her mother ! How kindly and respectfully receive his friends ! How affectionately treat all those who, in their respective offices, had the care and education of her ! She employed much of her time in reading, in which she discovered great strength of judgment ; she indulged herself in few diversions, and those with much caution. With what forbearance, with what patience, with what courage, did she endure her last illness !

3. She complied with all the directions of her physicians ; she encouraged her sister and her father ; and, when all her strength of body was exhausted, supported herself by the single vigor of her mind. That indeed continued, even to her last moments, unbroken by the pain of a long illness, or the terrors of approaching death ; and it is a reflection which makes the loss of her so much the more to be lamented. A loss infinitely severe ! and more severe by the particular conjuncture in which it happened !

4. She was contracted to a most worthy youth ; the wedding day was fixed, and we were all invited. How sad a change from the highest joy to the deepest sorrow ! How shall I express the wound that pierced my heart, when I heard Fundanus himself (as grief is ever finding out circumstances to aggravate its affliction), ordering the money he had designed to lay out upon clothes and jewels for her marriage, to be employed in myrrh and spices for her funeral !

5. He is a man of great learning and good sense, who has applied himself, from his earliest youth, to the noblest and most elevated studies ; but all the maxims of fortitude which he has received from books, or advanced himself, he now absolutely rejects ; and every other virtue of his heart gives place to all a parent's tenderness.

6. We shall excuse, we shall even approve his sorrow, when we consider what he has lost. He has lost a daughter, who resembled him in his manners, as well as his person ; and exactly copied out all her father. If his friend Marcellinus shall think proper to write to him, upon the subject of so reasonable a grief, let me remind him not to use the rougher arguments of consolation, and such as seem to carry a sort of reproof with them ; but those of kind and sympathizing humanity.

7. Time will render him more open to the dictates of reason ; for as a fresh wound shrinks back from the hand of the surgeon, but by degrees submits to, and even requires the means of its cure ; so a mind, under the first impressions of misfortune, shuns and rejects all arguments of consolation ; but at length, if applied with tenderness, calmly and willingly acquiesces in them. Farewell.

116. TO THE ROBIN.

ELIZA COOK.

ELIZA COOK, an English poetess of some note, was born in London, in 1718. There is a heartiness and a fresh good-nature ringing through every stanza of Miss Cook's poetry, that wins a way for it to every heart. She loves nature and makes others love it too.

1. I WISH I could welcome the spring, bonnie bird,
 With a carol as joyous as thine;
 Would my heart were as light as thy wing, bonnie bird,
 And thine eloquent spirit-song mine!

The bloom of the earth and the glow of the sky
 Win the loud-trilling lark from his nest;
 But though gushingly rich are his pæans on high,
 Yet, sweet robin, I like thee the best.

2. I've been marking the plumes of thy scarlet-faced suit,
 And the light in thy pretty black eye,
 'Till my harpstring of gladness is mournfully mute,
 And I echo thy note with a sigh.

For you perch on the bud-cover'd spray, bonnie bird,
 O'er the bench where I chance to recline,
 And you chatter and warble away, bonnie bird,
 Calling up all the tales of "lang syne."

3. They sung to my childhood the ballad that told
 Of "the snow coming down very fast;"
 And the plaints of the robin, all starving and cold,
 Flung a spell that will live to the last.

How my tiny heart struggled with sorrowful heaves,
 That kept choking my eyes and my breath;
 When I heard of thee spreading the shroud of green leaves,
 O'er the little ones lonely in death.

4. I stood with delight by the frost-checker'd pane,
And whisper'd, "See, see, Bobby comes ;"
While I fondly enticed him again and again,
With the handful of savory crumbs.

There were springes and nets in each thicket and glen,
That took captives by night and by day;
There were cages for chaffinch, for thrush, and for wren,
For linnet, for sparrow, and jay.

5. But if ever thou chanced to be caught, bonnie bird,
With what eager concern thou wert freed:
Keep a robin enslaved ! why, 'twas thought, bonnie bird
That "bad luck" would have follow'd the deed.

They wonder'd what led the young dreamer to rove,
In the face of a chill winter wind ;
But the daisy below, and the robin above,
Were bright things that I ever could find.

6. Thou wert nigh when the mountain streams gladden' the sight ;
When the autumn's blast smote the proud tree ;
In the corn-field of plenty, or desert of blight,
I was sure, bonnie bird, to see thee.

I sung to thee then as thou sing'st to me now,
And my strain was as fresh and as wild ;
Oh, what is the laurel Bæme twines for the brow,
To the wood-flowers pluck'd by the child !

7. Oh, would that, like thee, I could meet with all change
And ne'er murmur at aught that is sent ;
Oh, would I could bear with the dark and the fair,
And still hail it with voice of content.

How I wish I could welcome the spring, bonnie bird,
 With a carol as joyous as thine ;
 Would my heart were as light as thy wing, bonnie bird,
 And thy beautiful spirit-song mine !

117. THE RELIGION OF CATHOLICS.

DR. DOYLE.

Right Reverend JAMES DOYLE, late bishop of Kildare and Leighlin, was born at New Ross, County Wexford, Ireland, in 1786; died in 1834. During the fifteen years of Dr. Doyle's episcopacy, he was continually engaged in defending, with voice and pen, the rights of the Church, and the interests of the people. He lived in a troubled period of Irish history, when the island was convulsed from end to end by the tithe question, and the oppressive exactions of the landlords—when the voice of oppressed millions was thundering in the ears of the British government for Catholic emancipation; and on all those great questions, Dr. Doyle exercised a powerful influence. His letters written over the signature of J. K. L., on all the great topics of the day, political and religious, are classed among the ablest documents of the kind ever written.

1. It was the creed, my lord, of a Charlemagne and of a Louis, of an Alfred and an Edward, of the monarchs of the feudal times, as well as of the Emperors of Greece and Rome; it was believed at Venice and at Genoa, in Lucca and the Helvetic nations in the days of their freedom and greatness; all the barons of the middle ages, all the free cities of later times, professed the religion we now profess. You know well, my lord, that the charter of British freedom, and the common law of England, have their origin and source in Catholic times.

2. Who framed the free constitutions of the Spanish Goths? Who preserved science and literature, during the long night of the middle ages? Who imported literature from Constantino-ple, and opened for her an asylum at Rome, Florence, Padua, Paris, and Oxford? Who polished Europe by art, and refined it by legislation? Who discovered the New World, and opened a passage to another? Who were the masters of architecture, of painting, and of music? Who invented the compass, and the art of printing? Who were the poets, the historians, the jurists, the men of deep research, and profound literature?

3. Who have exalted human nature, and made man appear again little less than the angels? Were they not almost exclusively the professors of our creed? Were they who created and possessed freedom under every shape and form, unfit for her enjoyment? Were men, deemed even now the lights of the world and the benefactors of the human race, the deluded victims of a slavish superstition? But what is there in our creed which renders us unfit for freedom?

4. Is it the doctrine of passive obedience? No, for the obedience we yield to authority, is not blind, but reasonable; our religion does not create despotism; it supports every established constitution which is not opposed to the law of nature, unless it be altered by those who are entitled to change it. In Poland it supported an elective monarch; in France an hereditary sovereign; in Spain, an absolute or constitutional king indifferently; in England, when the houses of York and Lancaster contended, it declared that he who was king de facto, was entitled to the obedience of the people.

5. During the reign of the Tudors, there was a faithful adherence of the Catholics to their prince, under trials the most severe and galling, because the constitution required it; the same was exhibited by them to the ungrateful race of Stuart, but since the expulsion of James (foolishly called an abdication), have they not adopted with the nation at large, the doctrine of the Revolution: "that the crown is held in trust for the benefit of the people; and that should the monarch violate his compact, the subject is freed from the bond of allegiance?" Has there been any form of government ever devised by man, to which the religion of Catholics has not been accommodated?

6. Is there any obligation, either to a prince, or to a constitution, which it does not enforce?

What, my lord, is the allegiance of the man divided who gives to Cæsar what belongs to Cæsar, and to God what belongs to God? Is the allegiance of the priest divided who yields submission to his bishop and his king?—of the son who obeys his parent and his prince? And yet these duties are not more distinct than those which we owe our sovereign and our spiritual head. Is there any man in society who has not distinct duties to discharge?

7. May not the same person be the head of a corporation, and an officer of the king? a justice of the peace, perhaps, and a bankrupt surgeon, with half his pay? And are the duties thus imposed upon him, incompatible one with another? If the Pope can define that the Jewish sabbath is dissolved, and that the Lord's day is to be sanctified, may not this be believed without prejudice to the act of settlement, or that for the imitation of the crown? If the Church decree that on Fridays her children should abstain from flesh-meat, are they thereby controlled from obeying the king when he summons them to war?

118. THE WIFE.

WASHINGTON IRVING.

1. I HAVE often had occasion to remark the fortitude with which women sustain the most overwhelming reverses of fortune. Those disasters which break down the spirit of a man, and prostrate him in the dust, seem to call forth all the energies of the softer sex, and give such intrepidity and elevation to their character, that at times it approaches to sublimity.

2. Nothing can be more touching than to behold a soft and tender female, who had been all weakness and dependence, and alive to every trivial roughness, while treading the prosperous paths of life, suddenly arising in mental force to be the comforter and supporter of her husband under misfortune, and biding, with unshrinking firmness, the most bitter blasts of adversity.

3. As the vine, which has long twined its graceful foliage about the oak, and been lifted by it into sunshine, will, when the hardy plant is rifted by the thunderbolt, cling around it with its caressing tendrils, and bind up its shattered boughs ;

so is it beautifully ordered by Providence, that woman, who is the mere dependant and ornament of man in his happier hours, should be his stay and solace when smitten with sudden calamity; winding herself into the rugged recesses of his nature, tenderly supporting the drooping head, and binding up the broken heart.

4. I was once congratulating a friend, who had around him a blooming family, knit together in the strongest affection. "I can wish you no better lot," said he, with enthusiasm, "than TO HAVE A WIFE AND CHILDREN. If you are prosperous, there they are to share your prosperity; if otherwise, there they are to comfort you."

5. And, indeed, I have observed, that A MARRIED MAN, falling into misfortune, is more apt to retrieve his situation in the world than A SINGLE ONE; partly, because he is more stimulated to exertion by the necessities of the helpless and beloved beings who depend upon him for subsistence; but chiefly, because his spirits are soothed and relieved by domestic endearments, and his SELF-RESPECT kept alive by finding, that though all abroad is darkness and humiliation, yet there is still a little world of love at home, of which he is the monarch.

6. Whereas, A SINGLE MAN is apt to run to WASTE and SELF-NEGLECT; to fancy himself lonely and abandoned, and his heart to fall to ruin, like some deserted mansion, for want of an inhabitant.

119. CHRISTMAS.

LORD JOHN MANNERS.

1. OLD Christmas comes about again,
The blessed day draws near,
Albeit our faith and love do wax
More faint and cold each year.

Oh! but it was a goodly sound,
In th' unenlighten'd days,
To hear our fathers raise their song
Of simple-hearted praise.

2. Oh ! but it was a goodly sight,
The rough-built hall to see,
Glancing with high-born dames and men,
And hinds of low degree.

To holy Church's dearest sons,
The humble and the poor,
To all who came, the seneschal
Threw open wide the door.

3. With morris-dance, and carol-song,
And quaint old mystery,
Memorials of a holy-day
Were mingled in their glee.

Red berries bright, and holly green,
Proclaim'd o'er hall and bower
That holy Church ruled all the land
With undisputed power.

4. O'er wrekin wide, from side to side,
From graybeard, maid, and boy,
Loud rang the notes, swift flow'd the tide
Of unrestrain'd joy.

And now, of all our customs rare,
And good old English ways,
This one, of keeping Christmas-time,
Alone has reach'd our days.

5. Still, though our hearty glee has gone
Though faith and love be cold,
Still do we welcome Christmas-tide
As fondly as of old.

Still round the old paternal hearth
Do loving faces meet,
And brothers parted through the year
Do brothers kindly greet.

6. Oh ! may we aye, whate'er betide,
 In Christian joy and mirth,
 Sing welcome to the blessed day
 That gave our Saviour birth !
-

120. THE TRUCE OF GOD.

F R E D E T .

FREDET—late professor of history in St. Mary's College, Baltimore, has with great impartiality and truthfulness, compiled an ancient and modern history for the use of schools.

1. ANOTHER excellent institution that owed its existence to the middle ages, and for which humanity was also indebted to the happy influence of religion, was the sacred compact usually termed the Truce of God. From the ninth to the eleventh century, the feudal system, however beautiful in many of its principles, had been a constant source of contentions and wars. Each petty chieftain arrogated to himself an almost unlimited use of force and violence to avenge his wrongs, and pursue his rights, whether real or pretended. As, moreover, vassals were obliged to espouse the quarrels of their immediate lords, rapine, bloodshed, and their attendant miseries were to be seen everywhere ; nor could the most pacific citizens depend on one moment of perfect security, either for their properties or their lives.

2. Religion, by her divine and universally revered authority was alone capable of raising an efficacious barrier against this torrent of evils. Experience having already shown the impossibility of stemming it at once, prudent measures were taken gradually to diminish its violence. Several bishops ordered under penalty of excommunication, that, every week, during the four days consecrated to the memory of our Saviour's passion, death, burial, and resurrection, viz., from the afternoon of Wednesday till the morning of the following Monday, whatever might be the cause of strife and quarrel, all private hostilities should cease.

3. Shortly after, the same prohibition was extended to the whole time of Advent and Lent, including several weeks both after Christmas and after Easter-Sunday. This beneficial institution, which originated in France towards the year 1040, was adopted in England, Spain, etc., and was confirmed by several popes and councils : nor must it be thought that it remained a dead letter; its success, on the contrary, was so remarkable, that the pious age in which the experiment was made, hesitated not to attribute it to the interposition of Heaven.

4. Thus, by the exertions of ecclesiastical authority, the horrors and calamities of feudal war began to be considerably lessened and abridged. Its ravages were restrained to three days in the week and to certain seasons of the year; during the intervals of peace, there was leisure for passion to cool, for the mind to sicken at a languishing warfare, and for social habits to become more and more deeply rooted. A considerable number of days and weeks afforded security to all, and all, being now shielded by the religious sanction of this sacred compact, could travel abroad, or attend to their domestic affairs, without danger of molestation.

5. Such was the splendid victory which the religion of Christ won over the natural fierceness of the ancient tribes of the north ; a victory whose completion was also due to her influence, when the Crusades obliged those restless warriors to turn against the invading hordes of the Saracens and Turks, whose weapons which they had hitherto used against their fellow-christians.

121. THE HIGH-BORN LADYE.

MOORE.

THOMAS MOORE was born in Dublin, in 1780, died in 1852. No poet ever moulded the English tongue into softer or more melodious strains than Moore, and none, in any language, ever adorned his verse with more sparkling gems of wit, fancy, and sentiment. His "Lalla Rookh" has never been equalled in any tongue, and his "Irish Melodies" have been translated into almost every European language. Poetry must lose its charms when the lays of MOORE shall be unsought, unsung. His prose, however, is by no means equal to his poetry.

1. In vain all the knights of the Underwald woo'd her,
Though brightest of maidens, the proudest was she ;
Brave chieftains they sought, and young minstrels they sued her,
But worthy were none of the high-born Ladye.

“Whosoever I wed,” said this maid, so excelling,
“That knight must the conq’ror of conquerors be ;
He must place me in halls fit for monarchs to dwell in ;—
None else shall be Lord of the high-born Ladye !”

2. Thus spoke the proud damsel, with scorn looking round her
On knights and on nobles of highest degree,
Who humbly and hopelessly left as they found her,
And worshipp’d at distance the high-born Ladye.

At length came a knight from a far land to woo her,
With plumes on his helm, like the foam of the sea ;
His vizor was down—but, with voice that thrill’d through
her,
He whisper’d his vows to the high-born Ladye.

3. “Proud maiden ! I come with high spousals to grace thee
In me the great conq’ror of conquerors see ;
Enthroned in a hall fit for monarchs I’ll place thee,
And mine thou’rt forever, thou high-born Ladye !”

The maiden she smiled, and in jewels array’d her,
Of thrones and tiaras already dreamt she ;
And proud was the step, as her bridegroom convey’d her
In pomp to his home, of that high-born Ladye.

4. “But whither,” she, starting, exclaims, “have you led me ?
Here’s naught but a tomb and a dark cypress-tree ;

Is this the bright palace in which thou wouldst wed me?"
With scorn in her glance, said the high-born Ladye.

"'Tis the home," he replied, "of earth's loftiest creatures,"

Then lifted his helm for the fair one to see ;
But she sunk on the ground—'twas a skeleton's features,
And Death was the Lord of the high-born Ladye.

122. ADVICE TO A YOUNG LADY ON HER MARRIAGE.

JONATHAN SWIFT, a clergyman of the established church, and Dean of St. Patrick's, Dublin, was born in the same city in 1667 ; died, 1745. Of Swift's voluminous writings, the greater part are political and satirical. "Gulliver's Travels," "Tale of a Tub," and "The Battle of the Books" are best known to the reading world. The purity of Swift's style renders it a model of English composition.

1. THE grand affair of your life will be to gain and preserve the friendship and esteem of your husband. You are married to a man of good education and learning, of an excellent understanding, and an exact taste. It is true, and it is happy for you, that these qualities in him are adorned with great modesty, a most amiable sweetness of temper, and an unusual disposition to sobriety and virtue ; but, neither good nature nor virtue will suffer him to esteem you against his judgment ; and although he is not capable of using you ill, yet you will in time grow a thing indifferent, and, perhaps, contemptible, unless you can supply the loss of youth and beauty, with more durable qualities. You have but a very few years to be young and handsome in the eyes of the world, you must therefore use all endeavors to attain to some degree of those accomplishments, which your husband most values in other people, and for which he is most valued himself.

2. You must improve your mind, by closely pursuing such method of study as I shall direct or approve of. You must get a collection of history and travels, and spend some hours every day in reading them, and making extracts from them, if your memory be weak ; you must invite persons of knowledge and understanding to an acquaintance with you, by whose conversation you may learn to correct your taste and judgment ; and when you can bring yourself to comprehend and relish the good sense of others, you will arrive in time to think rightly yourself, and to become a reasonable and agreeable companion.

3. This must produce in your husband a true rational love and esteem for you, which old age will not diminish. He will have a regard for your judgment and opinion in matters of the greatest weight; you will be able to entertain each other without a third person to relieve you by finding discourse. The endowments of your mind will even make your person more agreeable to him ; and when you are alone, your time will not lie heavy upon your hands for want of some trifling amusement. I would have you look upon finery as a necessary folly, which all great ladies did whom I have ever known. I do not desire you to be out of the fashion, but to be the last and least in it.

4. I expect that your dress shall be one degree lower than your fortune can afford ; and in your own heart I would wish you to be a contemner of all distinctions which a finer petticoat can give you ; because it will neither make you richer, handsomer, younger, better natured, more virtuous or wise, than if it hung upon a peg. If you are in company with men of learning, though they happen to discourse of arts and sciences out of your compass, yet you will gather advantage by listening to them ; but if they be men of breeding as well as learning, they will seldom engage in any conversation where you ought not to be a leader, and in time have your part.

5. If they talk of the manners and customs of the several kingdoms of Europe, of travels into remoter nations, of the state of your own country, or of the great men and actions of Greece and Rome ; if they give their judgment upon English and French writers, either in verse or prose, or of the nature and limits of virtue and vice,—it is a shame for a lady not to relish such discourses, not to improve by them, and endeavor by reading and information to have her share in those entertainments.

6. Pray, observe, how insignificant things are many ladies, when they have passed their youth and beauty ; how contemptible they appear to men, and yet more contemptible to the younger part of their own sex, and have no relief, but in passing their afternoons in visits, where they are never acceptable ; while the former part of the day is spent in spleen and envy, or in vain endeavors to repair by art and dress the pains of time. Whereas, I have known ladies at sixty, to whom all the polite part of the court and town paid their addresses, without any further view than that of enjoying the pleasure of their conversation. I am ignorant of any one quality that is amiable in a man, which is not equally so in a woman ; I do not except even modesty and gentleness of nature. Nor do I know one vice or folly which is not equally detestable in both.

7. There is, indeed, one infirmity which is generally allowed you, I mean that of cowardice ; yet there should seem to be something very capricious, that when women profess their admiration of valor in our sex, they should fancy it a very graceful, becoming quality in themselves, to be afraid of their own shadows ; to scream in a barge when the weather is calmest, in a coach at the ring ; to run from a cow at a hundred yards distance ; to fall into fits at the sight of a spider, an arrow, or a frog. At least, if cowardice be a sign of cruelty (as it is generally granted), I can hardly think it an accomplishment so desirable as to be thought worth improving by reflection.

123. A CATHOLIC MAIDEN OF THE OLD TIMES.

BOYCE.

REV. J. BOYCE—a native of the north of Ireland, for several years pastor of the Catholic Church in Worcester, Mass. Under the name of Paul Coopergrass, he has written "Shandy Maguire," an excellent story of Irish life, "The Spaewife," and "Mary Lee." Mr. Boyce is an agreeable writer of fiction.

1. "WHY dost thou look at me so pityingly, good pilgrim?" said Alice. "Is my father dead? Speak, I entreat thee!"

The mendicant seemed not to hear her voice. He gazed at her as if she were a statue on a pedestal, bending forward and leaning on his long polestaff. At length, his lips began slightly to tremble, and then his eyes, which kept moving leisurely over her face and form, scanning every feature, became gradually suffused with tears.

2. "My father's dead!" said Alice, in a voice scarcely audible, as she saw the pilgrim's tears fall on his coarse gabardine.

The words, though but few, and uttered in almost the tone of a whisper, were yet so full of anguish and despair, that they instantly recalled the stranger's wandering thoughts.

Slowly the old man stretched out his hands, and gently laid them on the head of the fair girl, saying, in accents tremulous with emotion,—

3. "Thy father lives, my child, and sends thee his blessing by these hands; receive it, and that of an old outcast also who loves thee almost as well."

Alice knelt and raised her eyes towards heaven in speechless gratitude. Then, taking the beggar by the hand, she imprinted a kiss on his hard, sunburnt fingers. "Hast seen my father?" she inquired.

4. "Ay, truly have I. He is still at Brockton, with the faithful Reddy, who seldom leaves him even for a moment. I informed him of thy place of refuge, and he will soon venture hither to see thee."

"How looks he? Is he much altered?"

5. "Nay, I cannot answer thee in that, my child, having but seen him for the first time in seventeen years. It will be seventeen years come Holentide since we parted at Annie's grave—I mean at his wife's grave. I shook his honest hand for the last time across her open tomb, ere the earth had entirely covered her coffin from my sight. And, since that day, we have been both learning to forget each other, and the world also—he in his little library at Brockton, whence he has shut out all profane converse, and I in the woods and will of England, a roaming outcast, without a shelter or a home."

6. "So thou didst know my mother, good man?" said Alice, laying her hand on the beggar's arm, and looking up wistfully in his face.

"Thy mother?—ay, I knew her—once," he replied, with suppressed emotion.

"Then speak to me of my mother. I long to hear some one speak of her. People say she was very kind and gentle. Alas! I never saw her. She died in giving me birth; and so there's a void in my heart I would fain fill up with her image. Say, pilgrim, canst paint her to my fancy? I will listen to thee most attentively."

7. The mendicant turned his head aside, and drew his hand quickly across his eyes.

"Pardon, me, good man," said Alice, as she saw the motion, and understood it; "I fear me I have awakened some painful recollection."

"Nay," replied the mendicant, "it is but a foolish weakness." And he raised himself up to his full height, and planted his staff firmly against the rock, as if to nerve himself for the trial.

8. Father Peter and Nell Gower were conversing at the farther end of the cell, and casting a look occasionally in the direction of the speakers.

"Nell saith I am somewhat like my mother. Good man, dost think so?" inquired Alice.

"Like thy mother, my fair child? Ay, thy face is somewhat like. But the face is only a small part—a hundred such faces were not worth a heart like hers."

"She was so good?"

9. "Ay, and so noble, and so grand of soul."

"Ah!"

"And yet so humble, so charitable, so pure, and so truly Catholic. Hold, I'll question thee as to the resemblance, and then tell thee, mayhap, in how much thou'rt like thy mother."

"Speak on," said Alice; "I'll answer thee right faithfully."

"Hast been good to the poor beggar who came to beg an alms and shelter? and didst give him the kind word at meeting, and the secret dole at parting?"

Alice hesitated.

10. "She hath," replied a deep voice from a distant corner of the chapel.

Alice started, somewhat surprised at the solemn sound, but the mendicant seemed not to notice it.

"Hast worshipped thy God in the night and in the morning?"

"She hath."

"Hast been frequent at the sacred confessional and the holy altar?"

"She hath," responded the same voice, a third time.

11. "Dost love thy religion better than thy life?" demanded the pilgrim, in a sterner tone, still leaning on his staff, and looking steadily at the young girl. "Answer for thyself, maiden."

"Methinks I do," she at length replied, casting her eyes bashfully on the ground, and playing with the chain of her cross. "But I'm only a simple country girl, and have not yet been greatly tempted."

"Good," said the mendicant. "And art ready to sacrifice thy life for thy faith?"

"Ay, willingly!" responded Alice, in a tone of increased confidence.

12. "Hearken to me, child. Thy religion is a low, mean, and contemptible thing. It is driven out from the royal courts and princely halls of thy native land, where it once ruled triumphant, to dwell with the ignorant and the poor. It is forced to seek shelter in woods and caves. It is banished the presence of the great and powerful, despised and scoffed at even by the learned; nay, it is flung from their houses like a ragged garment, and fit only to be worn by wretched beggars like myself! Ha, girl! thy religion is the scorn of thy compeers—like the Christian name in the times of the Diocletians, it's a disgrace and dishonor to acknowledge it."

13. "I care not," said Alice; "was not my Redeemer despised for his religion?"

"And art bold enough to meet the contemptuous smiles, and withstand the winks and nods, of the enemies of thy faith, as thou passest them by?"

Alice answered not in words, but she raised the cross from her bosom, where it hung, and reverently kissed the lips of the image of the Saviour.

The mendicant understood the silent reply, and proceeded :

14. "But of thy father. Wouldst abandon him to preserve thy faith? Wouldst see him dragged on a hurdle to the gallows, amid the shouts of the rabble, when thy apostasy would save him?"

"What! is he a prisoner?" she cried, fearing the mendicant had hitherto been only preparing her for some dreadful announcement.

"Nay, answer me, maiden. Wouldst save thy father by apostasy?"

15. "Never!" responded Alice, raising herself to her full height, and crossing her arms on her breast as she spoke. "Never! I love him as fondly as ever daughter loved a parent—nay, I would give my life cheerfully to save his; but I would see him hanging on the gallows at Tyburn till the wind and sun had bleached his bones, rather than renounce the religion of my God and the honors of my ancestors!"

"Ha! thou wouldst, girl?" said the mendicant, catching her hand, and gazing full in her face. "Then thou hast learnt to feel as a Catholic."

124. MARCO BOZZARIS.

HALLECK.

FITZ GREENE HALLECK—an American poet, born at Guilford, Connecticut, in 1795. His poetry is musical, and full of vigor, evincing a refined taste, and a heart alive to every generous and noble sentiment.

[Marco Bozzaris, the Epaminondas of modern Greece, fell in a night attack upon the Turkish camp at Laspi, the site of the ancient Platæa, August 20, 1823, and expired in the moment of victory.]

1. At midnight, in his guarded tent,
The Turk was dreaming of the hour

When Greece, her knee in suppliance bent,
Should tremble at his power:
In dreams through camp and court he bore
The trophies of a conqueror;
In dreams his song of triumph heard;
Then wore his monarch's signet ring,—
Then press'd that monarch's throne,—a king;
As wild his thoughts, and gay of wing,
As Eden's garden bird.

2. An hour pass'd on,—the Turk awoke;
That bright dream was his last;
He woke, to hear his sentries shriek,—
“To arms! they come! the Greek! the Greek!”
He woke, to die midst flame and smoke,
And shout, and groan, and sabre-stroke,
And death-shots falling thick and fast
As lightnings from the mountain cloud;
And heard, with voice as trumpet loud,
Bozzaris cheer his band:—
“Strike—till the last arm'd foe expires!
Strike—for your altars and your fires!
Strike—for the green graves of your sires!
God, and your native land!”

3. They fought, like brave men, long and well;
They piled the ground with Moslem slain;
They conquer'd; but Bozzaris fell,
Bleeding at every vein.
His few surviving comrades saw
His smile, when rang their proud hurrah,
And the red field was won;
Then saw in death his eyelids close,
Calmly, as to a night's repose,
Like flowers at set of sun.

4. Come to the bridal chamber, Death!
Come to the mother's when she feels

For the first time her first-born's breath;
 Come when the blessèd seals
 That close the pestilence are broke,
 And crowded cities wail its stroke;
 Come in consumption's ghastly form,
 The earthquake shock, the ocean storm;
 Come when the heart beats high and warm,
 With banquet song, and dance, and wine,—
 And thou art terrible: the tear,
 The groan, the knell, the pall, the bier,
 And all we know, or dream, or fear,
 Of agony, are thine.

5. But to the hero, when his sword
 Has won the battle for the free,
 Thy voice sounds like a prophet's word,
 And in its hollow tones are heard
 The thanks of millions yet to be.
 Bozzaris! with the storied brave
 Greece nurtured in her glory's time,
 Rest thee: there is no prouder grave,
 Even in her own proud clime.
 We tell thy doom without a sigh;
 For thou art Freedom's now, and Fame's,—
 One of the few, the immortal names,
 That were not born to die!

125. DE LAVAL, FIRST BISHOP OF QUEBEC.

M O R G A N.

1. FRANÇOIS DE LAVAL DE MONTMORENCY, Abbé de Montigny, first bishop of Canada, and a most able, talented, and zealous prelate, was born at Laval, in Maine, France, on the 23d March, 1622. He was ordained priest at Paris on the 23d September, 1645, and was made Archdeacon of Evreux in 1653. He was consecrated Bishop of Petrea, in partibus infidelium, and was appointed Vicar Apostolic of New France by Pope Alexander VII., on the 5th of July, 1658. He arrived at Quebec, for the first time, on the 16th June, 1659; and returned to France in 1662. On the 26th March, 1663, he founded the Seminary of Quebec, a measure which was afterwards duly confirmed by Louis XIV., by letters patent, dated at Paris in the month of April following. He returned to Canada during the same year, and arrived at Quebec on the 28th September. He consecrated the Parochial Church of Quebec, on the 11th July, 1666, the second Sunday of that month. He went back to France in 1674, and was named Bishop of Quebec, a suffragan bishop of the Holy See, by a Bull of Clement X. dated 1st October of the same year. On this occasion the revenues of the Abbey of Meaubeck, in the diocese of Bourges, were united to the bishopric of Quebec.

2. On his return to Canada, he established his board by a decree of the 6th November, 1684, and entrusted to it the care of the Rectory of Quebec. The 14th of the same month, the board resigned the care of the rectory, and it devolved upon the seminary the same day. Monseigneur de Laval afterwards returned to France to obtain permission to retire, and with the view of choosing a successor. His choice fell upon the Abbé de St. Vallier, to whom was given the title of Grand Vicar, in which quality he was sent to Canada to exercise his zeal. De Laval resigned his bishopric of Quebec, in Paris, on the 24th of January, 1688. He left that city some time after to return to Quebec. He arrived there in the spring of the same year, and retired to his seminary, to which he made over the whole of his effects, and had the ortification of seeing the same twice burned before his death. fine, full of years and honors, a prelate, by his virtue and al, worthy of the church over which he had presided, he ed at Quebec on the 6th of May, 1708, at the advanced age 86, and was buried near the high altar, in the cathedral.

126. CARDINAL WOLSEY AND CROMWELL.¹

SHAKSPEARE.

WILLIAM SHAKSPEARE was born at Stratford-on-Avon, Warwickshire, England, in 1564; died in 1616. Shakspeare possessed all the great abilities of a poet, and united with them profound philosophical intellect. His expressions have become familiar, and it is through his plays that thousands have grown acquainted with the history of England. It is only to be regretted that an unpardonable license of language prevents any of his works from being suitable reading for the pure minded and young.—De Vere.

Wolsey. FAREWELL, a long farewell to all my greatness!
 This is the state of man; to-day he puts forth
 The tender leaves of hope, to-morrow blossoms,
 And bears his blushing honors thick upon him;
 The third day comes a frost, a killing frost;
 And—when he thinks, good easy man, full surely
 His greatness is a ripening—nips his root,
 And then he falls, as I do. I have ventured,
 Like little wanton boys that swim on bladders,
 This many summers in a sea of glory;
 But far beyond my depth; my high-blown pride
 At length broke under me; and now has left me,
 Weary, and old with service, to the mercy
 Of a rude stream, that must forever hide me.
 Vain pomp, and glory of this world, I hate ye!
 I feel my heart new opened; Oh, how wretched
 Is that poor man that hangs on princes' favors!
 There is, betwixt that smile we would aspire to,

¹ Thomas Cromwell, a statesman of the time of Henry the Eighth England.

That sweet aspect¹ of princes, and their ruin,
 More pangs and fears than wars or women have;
 And when he falls, he falls like Lucifer,
 Never to hope again.

Enter Cromwell, amazedly.

Why, how now, Cromwell?

Cromwell. I have no power to speak, sir.

Wol. What! amazed

At my misfortunes? Can thy spirit wonder,
 A great man should decline? Nay, an² you weep
 I am fallen indeed.

Crom. How does your Grace?

Wol. Why, well;

Never so truly happy, my good Cromwell.
 I know myself now: and I feel within me
 A peace above all earthly dignities,—
 A still and quiet conscience. The king has cured me,
 I humbly thank his grace; and from these shoulders,
 These ruin'd pillars, out of pity, taken
 A load would sink a navy—too much honor:
 Oh, 'tis a burden, Cromwell, 'tis a burden,
 Too heavy for a man that hopes for heaven.

Crom. I am glad, your Grace has made that right use of

Wol. I hope I have: I am able now, methinks, (Out of a fortitude of soul I feel),
 To endure more miseries, and greater far,
 Than my weak-hearted enemies dare offer.
 What news abroad?

Crom. The heaviest and the worst
 Is your displeasure with the king.

Wol. God bless him!

Crom. The next is, that Sir Thomas More is chosen
 Lord Chancellor in your place.

Wol. That's somewhat sudden:

¹ Shakspeare often puts the accent in aspect on the last syllable.

² An, by the old writers, is often used for if.

But he's a learned man. May he continue
 Long in his highness' favor, and do justice
 For truth's sake, and his conscience; that his bones,
 When he has run his course, and sleeps in blessings,
 May have a tomb of orphans' tears wept on 'em!
 What more?

Crom. That Cranmer is return'd with welcome,
 Install'd Lord Archbishop of Canterbury.

Wol. That's news, indeed.

Crom. Last, that the Lady Anne,
 Whom the king hath in secrecy long married,
 This day was view'd in open as his queen,
 Going to chapel; and the voice is now
 Only about her coronation.

Wol. There was the weight that pull'd me down.

Cromwell!

The king has gone beyond me; all my glories
 In that one woman I have lost forever:
 No sun shall ever usher forth mine honors,
 Nor gild again the noble troops that waited
 Upon my smiles. Go, get thee from me, Cromwell:
 I am a poor fallen man, unworthy now
 To be thy lord and master: seek the king;
 That sun, I pray, may never set! I have told him
 What and how true thou art: he will advance thee;
 Some little memory of me will stir him
 I know his noble nature), not to let
 Thy hopeful service perish too: good Cromwell,
 Neglect him not; make use now, and provide
 For thine own future safety.

Crom. Oh, my lord,
 Must I, then, leave you? Must I needs forego
 So good, so noble, and so true a master?
 Bear witness, all that have not hearts of iron,
 With what a sorrow Cromwell leaves his lord.
 The king shall have my service; but my prayers
 Forever, and forever, shall be yours.

Wol. Cromwell, I did not think to shed a tear

In all my miseries; but thou hast forced me
Out of thy honest truth to play the woman.
Let's dry our eyes; and thus far hear me, Cromwell;
And, when I am forgotten,—as I shall be,—
And sleep in dull, cold marble, where no mention
Of me must more be heard of,—say, I taught thee;
Say, Wolsey, that once trod the ways of glory,
And sounded all the depths and shoals of honor,
Found thee a way, out of his wreck, to rise in;
A sure and safe one, though thy master miss'd it.
Mark but my fall, and that that ruin'd me.
Cromwell, I charge thee, fling away ambition;
By that sin fell the angels; how can man, then,
The image of his Maker, hope to win by't?
Love thyself last; cherish those hearts that hate thee;
Corruption wins not more than honesty;
Still in thy right hand carry gentle peace,
To silence envious tongues. Be just, and fear not:
Let all the ends thou aim'st at be thy country's,
Thy God's, and truth's; then if thou fall'st, O Cromwell!
Thou fall'st a blessed martyr. Serve the king:
And,—Prithee, lead me in:
There take an inventory of all I have,
To the last penny; 'tis the king's: my robe
And my integrity to Heaven, is all
I dare now call my own. O Cromwell, Cromwell!
Had I but served my God with half the zeal
I served my king, He would not in mine age
Have left me naked to mine enemies!

Crom. Good sir, have patience.

Wol. So I have. Farewell

The hopes of court! my hopes in heaven do dwell.

127. ROME SAVED BY FEMALE VIRTUE.

H O O K.

NATHANIEL HOOK, a native of England, died 1763. The date of his birth unknown to us. He is the author of an excellent "History of Rome, from the building of Rome to the end of the Commonwealth." "Mr. Hook," says Allibone's "Dictionary of Authors," "was a Catholic, of whose life few particulars are known. He will always be remembered for his excellent Roman History, and as the friend of Alexander Pope, who brought the poet to his death-bed, to Bolingbroke's great disgust."

1. CORIOLANUS was a distinguished Roman senator and general, who had rendered eminent services to the republic. At these services were no security against envy and popular prejudices. He was at length treated with great severity and ingratitude, by the senate and people of Rome; and obliged to leave his country to preserve his life. Of a haughty and arrogant spirit, he resolved to avenge himself; and with this view, applied to the Volscians, the enemies of Rome, and tendered them his services against his native country. The offer was cordially embraced, and Coriolanus was made general of the Volscian army.

2. He recovered from the Romans all the towns they had taken from the Volsci; carried by assault several cities in Latium; and led his troops within five miles of the city of Rome. After several unsuccessful embassies from the senate, the hope of pacifying the injured exile appeared extinguished; and the sole business at Rome was to prepare, with the utmost diligence, for sustaining a siege. The young and able-bodied men had instantly the guard of the gates and trenches assigned to them; while those of the veterans, who though exempt from their age from bearing arms, were yet capable of service, undertook the defence of the ramparts.

3. The women, in the mean while, terrified by these movements, and the impending danger, into a neglect of their wonted decorum, ran tumultuously from their houses to the temples. Every sanctuary, and especially the temple of Jupiter Capitolinus, resounded with the wailings and loud supplications of women, prostrate before the statues of their divinities. At this general consternation and distress, Valeria (sister of the famous Valerius Poplicola), as if moved by a divine impulse, suddenly took her stand upon the top of the steps of the temple of Jupiter, assembled the women about her, and having first exhorted them not to be terrified by the greatness of the present danger, confidently declared, "That there was yet hope for the republic; that its preservation depended upon them, and upon their performance of the duty they owed their country."

4. "Alas!" cried one of the company, "what resource can there be in the weakness of wretched women, when our bravest men, our ablest warriors themselves despair?"

"It is not by the sword, nor by strength of arms," replied Valeria, "that we are to prevail; these belong not to our sex. Soft moving words must be our weapons and our force. Let us all in our mourning attire, and accompanied by our children go and entreat Veturia, the mother of Coriolanus, to intercede with her son for our common country. Veturia's prayers will bend his soul to pity. Haughty and implacable as he has hitherto appeared, he has not a heart so cruel and obdurate as not to relent when he shall see his mother, his revered, his beloved mother, a weeping suppliant at his feet."

5. This motion being universally applauded, the whole train of women took their way to Veturia's house. Her son's wife Volumnia, who was sitting with her when they arrived, was greatly surprised at their coming, hastily asked them the meaning of so extraordinary an appearance. "What is it," said she, "what can be the motive that has brought numerous a company of visitors to this house of sorrow?"

6. Valeria then addressed herself to the mother: "It is you, Veturia, that these women have recourse in the extreme peril with which they and their children are threatened. They intreat, implore, conjure you, to compassionate their distress, and the distress of our common country. Suffer not Rome to become a prey to the Volsci, and our enemies triumph over our liberty. Go to the camp of Coriolanus, take with you Volumnia and her two sons: let the excellent wife join her intercession to yours. Permit the women with their children to accompany you; they will cast themselves at his feet. O Veturia ! conjure him to grant peace to his fellow-citizens. Cease not to beg till you have obtained. So good a man can never withstand your prayers : our only hope is in you. Come then, Veturia ; the danger presses ; you have no time for deliberation ; the enterprise is worthy of your virtue ; Heaven will crown it with success ; Rome shall once more owe its preservation to our prayers. You will justly acquire to yourself an immortal fame, and have the pleasure to make every one of us a sharer in our glory."

Veturia, after a short silence, with tears in her eyes, answered : " Weak indeed is the foundation of your hope, Vale, when you place it in the aid of two miserable women. We are not wanting in affection to our country, nor need we remonstrance or entreaties to excite our zeal for its preservation. It is the power only of being serviceable that fails

Ever since that unfortunate hour, when the people in their madness so unjustly banished Coriolanus, his heart has been no less estranged from his family than from his country. You will be convinced of this sad truth, by his own words to me at parting.

" When he returned home from the assembly, where he had been condemned, he found us in the depth of affliction, bewailing the miseries that were sure to follow our being deprived of so dear a son, and so excellent a husband. We had gathered our children upon our knees. He kept himself at a distance from us ; and, when he had awhile stood silent, motionless as a rock, his eyes fixed, and without shedding a tear ; 'Tis all over,' he said. ' O mother ! and thou Volumnia, the best of mothers, to you Marcius is no more ! I am banished hence, and my affection to my country, and the services I have rendered it.

" ' I go this instant ; and I leave forever a city where good men are proscribed. Support this blow of fortune with the unanimity that becomes women of your high rank and virtue.

I commend my children to your care. Educate them in a manner worthy of you, and of the race from which they are descended. Heaven grant they may be more fortunate than their father, and never fall short of him in virtue; and may you in them find your consolation!—Farewell.’

10. “We started up at the sound of this word, and with loud cries of lamentation ran to him to receive his last embraces. I led his elder son by the hand; Volumnia had the younger in her arms. He turned his eyes from us, and putting us back with his hand ‘Mother,’ said he, ‘from this moment you have no son: our country has taken from you the stay of your old age. Nor to you, Volumnia, will Marcius be henceforth a husband; mayst thou be happy with another more fortunate! My dear children, you have lost your father.’

128. ROME SAVED BY FEMALE VIRTUE—continued.

1. “HE said no more, but instantly broke away from us. He departed from Rome without settling his domestic affairs or leaving any orders about them; without money, without servants, and even without letting us know to what part of the world he would direct his steps. It is now the fourth year since he went away; and he has never inquired after his family, nor, by letter or messenger, given us the least account of himself: so that it seems as if his mother and his wife, were the chief objects of that general hatred which he shows to his country.

2. “What success then can you expect from our entreaties to a man so implacable? Can two women bend that stubborn heart, which even all the ministers of religion were not able to soften? And indeed what shall I say to him? What can I reasonably desire of him?—that he would pardon ungrateful citizens, who have treated him as the vilest criminal? that he would take compassion upon a furious, unjust populace, which had no regard for his innocence? and that he would betray his nation, which has not only opened him an asylum, but has even preferred him to her most illustrious citizens in the command of her armies?

3. “With what face can I ask him to abandon such generous protectors, and deliver himself again into the hands of his most bitter enemies? Can a Roman mother, and a Roman wife, with decency, exact, from a son and a husband, compliances which must dishonor him before both gods and men? Mournful circumstance, in which we have not power to hate the most formidable enemy of our country! Leave us therefore to our unhappy destiny; and do not desire us to make it more unhappy, by an action that may cast a blemish upon our virtue."

4. The women made no answer but by their tears and entreaties. Some embraced her knees; others beseeched Volturnia to join her prayers to theirs; all conjured Veturia not to refuse her country this last assistance. Overcome at length by their urgent solicitations, she promised to do as they desired.

The very next day, all the most illustrious of the Roman women repaired to Veturia's house. There they presently mounted a number of chariots, which the consuls had ordered to be made ready for them; and, without any guard, took the way to the enemy's camp.

5. Coriolanus, perceiving from afar that long train of chariots, sent out some horsemen to learn the design of it. They quickly brought him word, that it was his mother, his wife, and a great number of other women, and their children coming to the camp. He doubtless conjectured what views the Romans had in so extraordinary a deputation; that this was the last expedient of the senate; and, in his own mind, he determined not to let himself be moved.

6. But he reckoned upon a savage inflexibility that was not in his nature; for going out with a few attendants to receive the women, he no sooner beheld Veturia attired in mourning, her eyes bathed in tears, and with a countenance and motion that spoke her sinking under a load of sorrow, than he ran hastily to her; and not only calling her mother, but adding to that word the most tender epithets, embraced her, wept over her, and held her in his arms to prevent her falling. The like tenderness he presently after expressed to his wife, highly commending her discretion in having constantly remained with his mother, since his departure from Rome. And then, with the warmest paternal affection, he caressed his children

7. When some time had been allowed to those silent tears of joy, which often flow plenteously at the sudden and unexpected meeting of persons dear to each other, Veturia entered upon the business she had undertaken. After many forcible appeals to his understanding and patriotism, she exclaimed : "What frenzy, what madness of anger transports my son ! Heaven is appeased by supplications, vows, and sacrifices : shall mortals be implacable ? Will Marcius set no bounds to his resentment ? But allowing that thy enmity to thy country is too violent to let thee listen to her petition for peace ; yet be not deaf, my son, be not inexorable, to the prayers and tears of thy mother.

8. "Thou darest the very appearance of ingratitude towards the Volsci ; and shall thy mother have reason to accuse thee of being ungrateful ? Call to mind the tender care I took of thy infancy and earliest youth ; the alarms, the anxiety, I suffered on thy account, when, entered into the state of manhood, thy life was almost daily exposed in foreign wars ; the apprehensions, the terrors, I underwent, when I saw thee so warmly engaged in our domestic quarrels, and, with heroic courage, opposing the unjust pretensions of the furious plebeians. My sad forebodings of the event have been but too well verified. Consider the wretched life I have endured, if it may be called life, the time that has passed since I was deprived of thee.

9. "O Marcius, refuse me not the only request I ever made to thee ; I will never importune thee with any other. Cease thy immoderate anger ; be reconciled to thy country ; this is all I ask ; grant me but this, and we shall both be happy. Freed from those tempestuous passions which now agitate thy soul, and from all the torments of self-reproach, thy days will flow smoothly on in the sweet serenity of conscious virtue : and as for me, if I carry back to Rome the hopes of an approaching peace, an assurance of thy being reconciled to thy country, with what transports of joy shall I be received ! In what honor, in what delightful repose, shall I pass the remainder of my life ! What immortal glory shall I have acquired !”

10. Coriolanus made no attempt to interrupt Veturia while she was speaking ; and when she had ceased, he still continued in deep silence. Anger, hatred, and desire of revenge, balanced in his heart those softer passions which the sight and discourse of his mother had awakened in his breast. Veturia perceiving his irresolution, and fearing the event, thus renewed her expostulation : “ Why dost thou not answer me, my son ?

Is there then such greatness of mind in giving all to resentment ? Art thou ashamed to grant any thing to a mother who thus entreats thee, thus humbles herself to thee ? If it be so, to what purpose should I longer endure a wretched life ?” As she uttered these last words, interrupted by sighs, she threw herself prostrate at his feet. His wife and children did the same ; and all the other women, with united voices of mournful accent, begged and implored his pity.

11. The Volscian officers, not able unmoved to behold this scene, turned away their eyes : but Coriolanus, almost beside himself to see Veturia at his feet, passionately cried out : “ Ah ! mother, what art thou doing ?” And tenderly pressing her hand, in raising her up, he added, in a low voice, “ Rome is saved, but thy son is lost !”

Early the next morning, Coriolanus broke up his camp, and peaceably marched his army homewards. Nobody had the hardness to contradict his orders. Many were exceedingly satisfied with his conduct ; but others excused it, being more affected with his filial respect to his mother, than with their own interests.

129. THE FRIARS AND THE KNIGHT.

K. H. DIGBY.

Two friars of Paris, travelling in the depth of winter, came at the first hour of the night, fatigued, covered with hail, and wet with rain, to the gate of a house where they hoped to receive hospitality, not knowing that it belonged to a knight who hated all friars, and who for twenty years had never made his confession. The mother of the family replied to their petition, "I know not, good fathers, what to do. If I admit you under our roof, I fear my husband; and if I send you away cruelly in this tempestuous night, I shall dread the indignation of God. Enter, and hide yourselves till my husband returns from hunting, and has supped, for then I shall be able to supply you secretly with what is needful."

2. Shortly, the husband returns, sups joyfully, but, perceiving that his wife is sad, desires to know the cause. She replies that she dares not disclose it. Pressed and encouraged, she at length relates what has happened, adding, that she fears God's judgment, seeing that his servants are afflicted with cold and hunger, while they are feasting at their ease. The knight, becoming more gentle, orders them to be led forth from their hiding-place, and to be supplied with food.

3. The poor friars came forth, and drew near the fire; and when he sees their emaciated faces, humid raiment, and their feet stained with blood, the hand of the Lord is upon him, and from a lion he becomes a lamb. With his own hands he washes their feet, places the table, and prepares their beds bringing in fresh straw. After the supper, with altered look and tone, he addresses the elder friar, and asks whether a shameless sinner, who hath not confessed since many years can hope for pardon from God?

4. "Yea, in sooth," replied the friar; "hope in the Lord and do good, and he will deal with thee according to his mercy; for in whatever day the sinner repents, he will remember his iniquity no more." The contrite host declares that he will not then defer any longer approaching the sacrament. "This very night," said he, "I will unburden my conscience lest my soul should be required of me." The friar, however, little suspecting danger of death, advised him to wait till morning. All retired to rest; but during the night the friar became alarmed, rose, prostrated himself on the earth, and besought God to spare the sinner.

5. In the morning, however, the master of the house was found dead. The man of God, judging from what had passed consoled the widow, declared that in his dreams he had been assured of the salvation of her husband; and the man was buried honorably, bells were tolled, and mass was sung, and the friars departed on their way.

6. It is to instances of this kind that St. Jerome alludes in his beautiful epistle to Lacta, where he says, "A holy and faithful family must needs sanctify its infidel chief. That man cannot be far from entering upon the career of faith, who is surrounded by sons and grandsons enlightened by the faith."

130. CATHOLIC RUINS.

CASWELL.

FATHER CASWELL is a convert from Anglicanism, and a priest of the Oratory of St. Philip Neri. He is a poet, calm, subdued, free from all turbulence, peaceful and serene. His poetry is of a very high order — Dr. Brownson.

1. WHERE once our fathers offer'd praise and prayer,
And sacrifice sublime ;
Where rose upon the incense-breathing air
The chant of olden time ;—

Now, amid arches mouldering to the earth,
The boding night-owl raves ;
And pleasure-parties dance in idle mirth
O'er the forgotten graves.

2. Or worse ; the heretic of modern days
Has made those walls his prize ;
And in the pile our Faith alone could raise,
That very Faith denies !

God of our fathers, look upon our woe !
How long wilt thou not hear ?
How long shall thy true vine be trodden low,
Nor help from thee appear ?

3. Oh, by our glory in the days gone by ;
 Oh, by thine ancient love ;
 Oh, by our thousand Saints, who ceaseless cry
 Before thy throne above ;

Thou, for this isle, compassionate though just,
 Cherish thy wrath no more ;
 But build again her temple from the dust,
 And our lost hope restore !

131. GIL BLAS AND THE PARASITE.

LE SAGE.

ALAIN RENÉ LE SAGE, a celebrated French novelist and dramatic writer born in 1668, died in 1747. He is principally remembered for his novel "Gil Blas," which first appeared in 1715.

1. WHEN the omelet I had bespoken was ready, I sat down to table by myself ; and had not yet swallowed the first mouthful when the landlord came in, followed by the man who had stopped him in the street. This cavalier, who wore a long sword, and seemed to be about thirty years of age, advanced towards me with an eager air, saying, " Mr. Student, I am informed that you are that Signor Gil Blas of Santillane, who is the link of philosophy, and ornament of Oviedo. Is it possible that you are that mirror of learning, that sublime genius, whose reputation is so great in this country ? You know not," continued he, addressing himself to the innkeeper and his wife, " you know not what you possess ! You have a treasure in your house ! Behold, in this young gentleman, the eighth wonder of the world ! " Then turning to me, and throwing his arms about my neck, " Forgive," cried he, " my transports ! I cannot contain the joy that your presence creates."

2. I could not answer for some time, because he locked me so closely in his arms that I was almost suffocated for want of breath ; and it was not till I had disengaged my head from his embrace that I replied, "Signor Cavalier, I did not think my name was known at Peñaflor." "How! known!" resumed he, in his former strain; "we keep a register of all the celebrated names within twenty leagues of us. You, in particular, are looked upon as a prodigy; and I don't at all doubt that Spain will one day be as proud of you as Greece was of her Seven Sages." These words were followed by a fresh hug, which I was forced to endure, though at the risk of strangulation. With the little experience I had, I ought not to have been the dupe of his professions and hyperbolical compliments.

3. I ought to have known, by his extravagant flattery, that he was one of those parasites who abound in every town, and who, when a stranger arrives, introduce themselves to him, in order to feast at his expense. But my youth and vanity made me judge otherwise. My admirer appeared to me so much of a gentleman, that I invited him to take a share of my supper. "Ah! with all my soul," cried he; "I am too much obliged to my kind stars for having thrown me in the way of the illustrious Gil Blas, not to enjoy my good fortune as long as I can! I have no great appetite," pursued he, "but I will sit down to bear you company, and eat a mouthful purely out of complaisance."

4. So saying, my panegyrist took his place right over against me; and, a cover being laid for him, he attacked the omelet as voraciously as if he had fasted three whole days. By his complaisant beginning I foresaw that our dish would not last long, and I therefore ordered a second, which they pressed with such dispatch that it was served just as we—or rather he—had made an end of the first. He proceeded on this with the same vigor; and found means, without losing one stroke of his teeth, to overwhelm me with praises during the whole repast, which made me very well pleased with my sweet self. He drank in proportion to his eating; sometimes to my health, sometimes to that of my father and mother, whose happiness in having such a son as I he could not enough admire.

5. All the while he plied me with wine, and insisted upon my doing him justice, while I toasted health for health ; a circumstance which, together with his intoxicating flattery, put me into such good humor, that, seeing our second omelet half devoured, I asked the landlord if he had no fish in the house. Signor Corcuélo, who, in all likelihood, had a fellow-feeling with the parasite, replied, "I have a delicate trout ; but those who eat it must pay for the sauce ;—'tis a bit too dainty for your palate, I doubt." "What do you call too dainty ?" said the sycophant, raising his voice ; "you're a wiseacre, indeed ! Know that there is nothing in this house too good for Signor Gil Blas of Santillane, who deserves to be entertained like a prince."

6. I was pleased at his laying hold of the landlord's last words, in which he prevented me, who, finding myself offended, said, with an air of disdain, "Produce this trout of yours, Gaffer Corcuélo, and give yourself no trouble about the consequence." This was what the innkeeper wanted. He got it ready, and served it up in a trice. At sight of this new dish I could perceive the parasite's eye sparkle with joy ; and he renewed that complaisance—I mean for the fish—which he had already shown for the eggs. At last, however, he was obliged to give out, for fear of accident, being crammed to the very throat.

7. Having, therefore, eaten and drunk sufficiently, he thought proper to conclude the farce by rising from table and accosting me in these words : "Signor Gil Blas, I am too well satisfied with your good cheer to leave you without offering an important advice, which you seem to have great occasion for. Henceforth, beware of praise, and be upon your guard against everybody you do not know. You may meet with other people inclined to divert themselves with your credulity, and, perhaps, to push things still further ; but don't be duped again, nor believe yourself (though they should swear it) the eighth wonder of the world." So saying, he laughed in my face, and stalked away.

132. THE DYING CHILD ON NEW YEAR'S EVE.

TENNYSON.

IF you're waking, call me early, call me early, mother
dear ;
For I would see the sun rise upon the glad new year :
It is the last new year that ever I shall see ;
Then you may lay me low i' the mould, and think no more o' me.

To-night I saw the sun set ; he set and left behind
The good old year, the dear old time, and all my peace of mind ;
And the new year's coming up, mother, but I shall never see
The may upon the blackthorn, the leaf upon the tree.

There's not a flower upon the hills ; the frost is on the pane ;
I only wish to live till the snow-drops come again :
I wish the snow would melt, and the sun come out on high,
I long to see a flower so before the day I die.

The building rook will caw from the windy, tall elm-tree,
And the tufted plover pipe along the fallow lea,
And the swallow will come back again with summer o'er the wave ;
But I shall lie alone, mother, within the mouldering grave.

When the flowers come again, mother, beneath the waning light,
You'll never see me more in the long gray fields at night ;
When from the dry dark wood the summer airs blow cool,
On the oat-grass, and the sword-grass, and the bulrush in the pool.

Ye'll bury me, my mother, just beneath the hawthorn shade ;

And ye'll sometimes come and see me where I am lowly laid ;
I shall not forget ye, mother, I shall hear ye where ye pass,
With your feet above my head in the long and pleasant grass.

4. I have been wild and wayward; but you'll forgive me now
You'll kiss me, my own mother, upon my cheek and brow
Nay, nay; you must not weep, nor let your grief be wild;
You should not fret for me, mother, you have another child

Oh, I will come again, mother, from out my resting-place Though you'll not see me, mother, I shall look upon your face :

Though I cannot speak a word, I shall hearken what you say,

And be often, often with you, when you think I'm far away

5. Good-night, good-night ! When I have said good-night for evermore,

And ye see me carried out from the threshold of the door
Don't let Effie come and see me till my grave be growing green ;

She'll be a better child to you than ever I have been.

She'll find my garden tools upon the granary floor ;
Let her take 'em, they are hers ; I shall never garden more.

But tell her, when I'm gone, to train the rosebush that set,

About the parlor window and the box of mignonette.

6. Good-night, sweet mother ! call me when it begins dawn ;

All night I lie awake, but I fall asleep at morn.

But I would see the sun rise upon the glad new year ;

So, if you're waking, call me—call me early, mother dear

133. ANECDOTE OF KING CHARLES II. OF SPAIN.

CATHOLIC WEEKLY INSTRUCTOR.

1. ON the 20th of February, 1685, this king went to take drive in the environs of Madrid. The day was remarkably fine, and the place was crowded with people. Suddenly, a priest in surplice, attended by only a boy, approached; and the king, doubting whether he was going to give the holy communion, or only extreme unction, questioned him, and was answered that he was bearing the holy Viaticum to a poor man in a cottage at some distance, and had been able to procure no better attendance, owing to the fineness of the day, which had left no one at home.

2. In an instant, the king opened the carriage-door, and leaping out, fell upon his knees and adored the Blessed Eucharist; then, with most respectful words, entreated the priest to take his place, shut the carriage-door, then walked at the side, with his hat in his hand. The way was long and tedious, but the good king went it cheerfully, and arrived at the cottage, opened himself the carriage, handed down the priest, and knelt while he passed. He entered into the poor house, and after the Holy Sacrament had been administered, went up to the bed, consoled with kind words the dying man, gave him an abundant alms, and made ample provision for an only daughter whom he left.

3. He now insisted on the priest again taking his place in the carriage. But the good curate, seeing how fatigued the king was, entreated him not to think of walking back, and at length, yielding to his importunities, he consented to go in the second carriage, while the priest went alone in the first. When they reached Madrid, the king got out, and again took his place, uncovered, by the carriage door.

4. But by this time the whole city was in commotion. The Confraternity of the Blessed Sacrament came forth with lighted tapers, and the nobility came forth in crowds, to follow the footsteps of their sovereign. In magnificent state, the procession reached the church of St. Mark, where benediction was given, and when the king came out, a vast multitude assembled there, greeted him with a burst of enthusiastic applause, which showed how far from lowering himself in his subjects' eyes, is a sovereign who pays due homage to the King of kings.

134. SPIRITUAL ADVANTAGES OF CATHOLIC CITIES.

K. H. DIGBY.

1. IN a modern city men in the evening leave their houses for a banquet ; in a Catholic city they go out for the benediction. The offices of the Church, morning and evening, and even the night instructions, were not wanting to those who were still living in the world ; and if the intervals were passed in study, or other intellectual exercise, it was a life scholastic and almost monastical. The number of churches always opened the frequent processions, and the repeated instructions of the clergy, made the whole city like a holy place, and were, without doubt, the means of making multitudes to choose the straight entrance, and to walk in the narrow way. There are many who have no idea of the perfection in which great numbers, in every rank of society, pass their lives in Catholic cities, not even excepting that capital which has of late been made the nurse of so much ill.

2. But wherever the modern philosophy has created, as it were, an atmosphere, that which is spiritual is so confined, closed, and isolated, that its existence is hardly felt or known. The world appears to reign with undisputed possession, and that, too, as if it had authority to reign. And yet there are tender and passionate souls who have need of being unceasingly preserved in the path of virtue by the reign of religious exercises, who, when deprived of the power of approaching the hour their inclinations may suggest to the sources of grace are exposed to great perils, and who perhaps sometimes incur in consequence, eternal death.

“ Ah me, how many perils do enfold
The righteous man, to make him daily fall ! ”

3. House of Prayer, why close thy gates? Is there an hour in all nature when the heart should be weary of prayer? when man whom God doth deign to hear in thee as his temple, should have no incense to offer before thy altar, no tear to confide to thee? Mark the manners, too, of the multitude that loiters in the public ways of every frequented town. See, how it meekly kneels to receive a benediction from the bishop who happens to pass by; and when the dusk comes on, and the lamp of the sanctuary begins to burn brighter, and to arrest the eye of the passenger through the opened doors of churches, hearken to the sweet sound of innumerable bells which rises from all sides, and see what a change of movement takes place among this joyous and innocent people:

4. The old men break off their conversation on the benches at the doors, and take out their rosaries; the children snatch up their books and jackets from the green in token that play is over; the women rise from their labor of the distaff; and all together proceed into the church, when the solemn litany soon rises with its abrupt and crashing peal, till the bells all toll out their last and loudest tone, and the adorable Victim is raised over the prostrate people, who then issue forth and retire to their respective homes in sweet peace, and with an expression of the utmost thankfulness and joy.

5. The moderns in vain attempt to account for the difference of manners in these Catholic cities, and in their own, by referring to their present prosperity and accumulation of wealth; these cities in point of magnificence incomparably surpassed theirs, and with respect to riches, they were not superior, for peace was in their strength, and abundance in their towers.

135. ON LETTER WRITING.

BLACKWOOD'S MAGAZINE.

1. EPISTOLARY as well as personal intercourse is, according to the mode in which it is carried on, one of the pleasantest or most irksome things in the world. It is delightful to drop in on a friend without the solemn prelude of invitation and acceptance, to join a social circle, where we may suffer our minds and hearts to relax and expand in the happy consciousness of perfect security from invidious remark and carping criticism ; where we may give the reins to the sportiveness of innocent fancy, or the enthusiasm of warm-hearted feeling ; where we may talk sense or nonsense, (I pity people who cannot talk nonsense), without fear of being looked into icicles by the coldness of unimaginative people, living pieces of clock-work, who dare not themselves utter a word, or lift up a little finger, without first weighing the important point in the hair balance of propriety and good breeding.

2. It is equally delightful to let the pen talk freely, and unpremeditatedly, and to one by whom we are sure of being understood ; but a formal letter, like a ceremonious morning visit, is tedious alike to the writer and receiver ; for the most part spun out with unmeaning phrases, trite observations, complimentary flourishes, and protestations of respect and attachment, so far not deceitful, as they never deceive anybody. Oh, the misery of having to compose a set, proper, well-worded, correctly-pointed, polite, elegant epistle ! one that must have a beginning, a middle, and an end, as methodically arranged and portioned out as the several parts of a sermon under three heads, or the three gradations of shade in a school-girl's first landscape !

3. For my part, I would rather be set to beat hemp, or weed in a turnip field, than to write such a letter exactly every month, or every fortnight, at the precise point of time from the date of our correspondent's last letter, that he or she wrote after the reception of ours ; as if one's thoughts bubbled up to the well-head, at regular periods, a pint at a time, to be bottled off for immediate use. Thought ! what has thought to do in such a correspondence ? It murders thought, quenches fancy, wastes time, spoils paper, wears out innocent goose-quills. " I'd rather be a kitten, and cry meow than one of those same " prosing letter-mongers.

4. Surely in this age of invention something may be stru ut to obviate the necessity (if such necessity exists) of so asking, degrading the human intellect. Why should not a sort of mute barrel-organ be constructed on the plan of those that play sets of tunes and country dances, to indite a catalogue of polite epistles calculated for all the ceremonious observances of good breeding? Oh, the unspeakable relief (could such a machine be invented) of having only to grind out an answer to one of one's "dear, five hundred friends!"

5. Or, suppose there were to be an epistolary steam-engine. Yes, that's the thing. Steam does every thing now-a-days. Dear Mr. Brunel, set about it, I beseech you, and achieve the most glorious of your undertakings. The block machine at Portsmouth would be nothing to it. That spares manual labor; this would relieve mental drudgery, and thousands yet unborn . . . but hold! I am not so sure the female sex in general may quite enter into my views of the subject.

6. Those who pique themselves on the elegant style of their billets, or those fair scriblerinas just emancipated from boarding-school restraints, or the dragonism of their governess, just beginning to taste the refined enjoyments of sentimental, confidential, soul-breathing correspondence with some Angelina, Graphina, or Laura Matilda; to indite beautiful little notes, with long-tailed letters, upon vellum paper, with pink margins, sealed with sweet mottoes, and dainty devices, the whole deliciously perfumed with musk and attar of roses; young ladies who collect "copies of verses," and charades, keep albums, copy patterns, make bread seals, work little dogs upon foot-cloths, and paint flowers without shadow—oh! no! the epistolary steam-engine will never come into vogue with those dear creatures. They must enjoy the "feast of reason, and the flow of soul," and they must write—yes! and how they write!

7. But for another genus of female scribes, unhappy innocents! who groan in spirit at the dire necessity of having to hammer out one of those aforesaid terrible epistles; who, having in due form dated the gilt-edged sheet that lies outspread before them in appalling whiteness, having also felicitously achieved the graceful exordium, "My dear Mrs. P," or "My dear Lady V," or "My dear — any thing else," feel that they are in for it, and must say something! Oh, that something that must come of nothing! those bricks that must be made without straw! those pages that must be filled with words! Yea, with words that must be sewed into sentences! Yea, with sentences that must seem to mean something; the whole to be tacked together, all neatly fitted and dovetailed so as to form one smooth, polished surface!

8. What were the labors of Hercules to such a task! The very thought of it puts me into a mental perspiration; and, from my inmost soul, I compassionate the unfortunates now (at this very moment, perhaps) screwed up perpendicularly in the seat of torture, having in their right hand a fresh-nibbed patent pen, dipped ever and anon into the ink-bottle, as if to hook up ideas, and under the outspread palm of the left hand a fair sheet of best Bath post (ready to receive thoughts yet unhatched) on which their eyes are riveted with a stare of disconsolate perplexity infinitely touching to a feeling mind.

9. To such unhappy persons, in whose miseries I deeply sympathize. . . . Have I not groaned under similar horrors, from the hour when I was first shut up (under lock and key, I believe) to indite a dutiful epistle to an honored aunt? I remember, as if it were yesterday, the moment when she who had enjoined the task entered to inspect the performance which, by her calculation, should have been fully completed. I remember how sheepishly I hung down my head, when she snatched from before me the paper (on which I had made no farther progress than "My dear ant"), angrily exclaiming "What, child! have you been shut up here three hours to call your aunt a pismire?" From that hour of humiliation I have too often groaned under the endurance of similar penance, and I have learned from my own sufferings to compassionate those of my dear sisters in affliction. To such unhappy persons then, I would fain offer a few hints (the fruit of long experience), which, if they have not already been suggested by their own observation, may prove serviceable in the hour of emergency.

10. Let them—or suppose I address myself to one particu-

er sufferer ; there is something more confidential in that manner of communicating one's ideas. As Moore says, "Heart speaks to heart." I say, then, take always special care to write by candlelight, for not only is the apparently unimportant operation of snuffing the candle in itself a momentary relief to the depressing consciousness of mental vacuum, but not infrequently that trifling act, or the brightening flame of the taper, elicits, as it were, from the dull embers of fancy, a sympathetic spark of fortunate conception. When such a one occurs, seize it quickly and dexterously, but, at the same time, with such cautious prudence, as not to huddle up and contract in one short, paltry sentence, that which, if ingeniously handled, may be wiredrawn, so as to undulate gracefully and smoothly over a whole page.

11. For the more ready practice of this invaluable art of relating, it will be expedient to stock your memory with a large assortment of those precious words of many syllables, that fill whole lines at once ; "incomprehensibly, amazingly, decidedly, solicitously, inconceivably, incontrovertibly." An opportunity of using these, is, to a distressed spinster, as delightful as a copy all m's and n's to a child. "Command you say, your mind from play." They run on with such delicious smoothness !

136. THE ART OF BOOK-KEEPING.

THOMAS HOOD.

THOMAS HOOD, born in 1798 ; died, 1845. One of the best of the later English humorists. His poetry is indeed characterized by the true marks of genuine humor, which is ever based on real pathos and refined sensibility.

How hard, when those who do not wish to lend, thus lose,
their books,

Are snared by anglers,—folks that fish with literary Hooks,—

Who call and take some favorite tome, but never read it through;—

They thus complete their set at home, by making one at you.

I, of my "Spenser" quite bereft, last winter sore was shaken:

Of "Lamb" I've but a quarter left, nor could I save my
"Bacon;"

And then I saw my "Crabbe," at last, like Hamlet, backward go ;

And as the tide was ebbing fast, of course I lost my
"Rowe."

2. My "Mallet" served to knock me down, which makes me
thus a talker;

And once, when I was out of town, my "Johnson" proved a "Walker."

While studying, o'er the fire, one day, my "Hobbes"
amidst the smoke,

They bore my "Colman" clean away, and carried off my
"Coke."

They pick'd my "Locke," to me far more than Bramhall patent worth,

And now my losses I deplore, without a "Home" on earth.

If once a book you let them lift, another they conceal,
For though I caught them stealing "Swift," as quick went my "Steele."

3. "Hope" is not now upon my shelf, where late he stood elated;

But what is strange, my "Pope" himself is excommunicated.

My little "Suckling" in the grave is sunk to swell
ravage ;

And what was Crusoe's fate to save, 'twas mine to lose —a "Savage."

Even "Glover's" works I cannot put my frozen hands upon;

Though ever since I lost my "Foote," my "Bunyan" been gone.

My "Hoyle" with "Cotton" went oppress'd ; my "Taylor," too, must fail ;
To save my "Goldsmith" from arrest, in vain I offer'd
"Bayle."

I "Prior" sought, but could not see the "Hood" so late in front ;
And when I turned to hunt for "Lee," oh ! where was my
"Leigh Hunt" ?
I tried to laugh, old care to tickle, yet could not "Tickle"
touch ;
And then, alack ! I miss'd my "Mickle,"—and surely Mickle's much.

'Tis quite enough my griefs to feed, my sorrows to excuse,
To think I cannot read my "Reid," nor even use my "Hughes ;"
My classics would not quiet lie, a thing so fondly hoped ;
Like Dr. Primrose, I may cry, my "Livy" has eloped.

My life is ebbing fast away ; I suffer from these shocks,
And though I fixed a lock on "Gray," there's gray upon my locks ;
I'm far from "Young," am growing pale, I see my "Butler" fly ;
And when they ask about my ail, 'tis "Burton" I reply.

They still have made me slight returns, and thus my griefs divide ;
For oh ! they cured me of my "Burns," and eased my
"Akenside."
But all I think I shall not say, nor let my anger burn,
For, as they never found me "Gay," they have not left me "Sterne."

137. THE ALHAMBRA BY MOONLIGHT.

IRVING.

[The palace or castle called the Alhambra, consists of the remains of a very extensive and ancient pile of buildings in Spain, erected by the Moors when they were rulers of the country.]

1. I HAVE given a picture of my apartment on my first taking possession of it: a few evenings have produced a thorough change in the scene and in my feelings. The moon, which then was invisible, has gradually gained upon the nights, and now rolls in full splendor above the towers, pouring a flood of tempered light into every court and hall. The garden beneath my window is gently lighted up; the orange and citron trees are tipped with silver; the fountain sparkles in the moonbeams; and even the blush of the rose is faintly visible.

2. I have sat for hours at my window, inhaling the sweetness of the garden, and musing on the checkered features of those whose history is dimly shadowed out in the elegant memorials around. Sometimes I have issued forth at midnight when every thing was quiet, and have wandered over the whole building. Who can do justice to a moonlight night in such climate, and in such a place!

3. The temperature of an Andalusian midnight in summer is perfectly ethereal. We seem lifted up into a purer atmosphere: there is a serenity of soul, a buoyancy of spirits, and elasticity of frame, that render mere existence enjoyment. The effect of moonlight, too, on the Alhambra, has something like enchantment. Every rent and chasm of time, every mouldering tint and weather-stain disappears; the marble resumes its original whiteness; the long colonnades brighten in the moonbeams; the halls are illuminated with a softened radiance, until the whole edifice reminds one of the enchanted palace of an Arabian tale.

4. At such a time, I have ascended to the little pavilion called the queen's toilet, to enjoy its varied and extensive prospect. To the right, the snowy summits of the Sierra Nevada would gleam, like silver clouds, against the dark firmament, and all the outlines of the mountains would tened, yet delicately defined. My delight, however, would be to lean over the parapet of the Teeador, and gaze down on Granada, spread out like a map below me ; all buried in deep repose, and its white palaces and convents sleeping, as it were, in the moonshine.

5. Sometimes, I would hear the faint sounds of castanets from some party of dancers lingering in the Alameda ; at other times, I have heard the dubious tones of a guitar, and the notes of a single voice rising from some solitary street, and I have pictured to myself some youthful cavalier serenading a lady's window—a gallant custom of former days, but now nearly on the decline, except in the remote towns and villages of Spain.

3. Such are the scenes that have detained me for many an hour loitering about the courts and balconies of the castle, enjoying that mixture of reverie and sensation which steal away existence in a southern climate, and it has been almost morning before I have retired to my bed, and been lulled to sleep by the falling waters of the fountain of Lindaraxa.

138. BEST KIND OF REVENGE.

CHAMBERS.

ROBERT CHAMBERS, born in Peebles, Scotland, in 1802. He and his brother William, have written numerous works in various departments of literature. They are also known as eminent Scotch publishers.

1. Some years ago, a warehouseman in Manchester, England, published a scurrilous pamphlet, in which he endeavored to hold up the house of Grant Brothers to ridicule. William Grant remarked upon the occurrence, that the man would live to repent what he had done ; and this was conveyed by some messenger to the libeller, who said, " Oh, I suppose he thinks he shall some time or other be in his debt ; but I will take good care of that." It happens, however, that a man in business does not always choose who shall be his creditors. The pamphleteer became a bankrupt, and the brothers held an acceptance of his which had been indorsed to them by the drawer, who had also become a bankrupt.

2. The wantonly-libelled men had thus become creditors of the libeller! They had it in their power to make him repent of his audacity. He could not obtain his certificate without their signature, and without it he could not enter into business again. He had obtained the number of signatures required by the bankrupt law, except one. It seemed folly to hope that the firm of "the brothers" would supply the deficiency. What! they, who had cruelly been made the laughing-stocks of the public, forget the wrong and favor the wrong-doer? He despaired. But the claims of a wife and children forced him at last to make the application. Humbled by misery, he presented himself at the counting-house of the wronged.

3. Mr. William Grant was there alone, and his first words to the delinquent were, "Shut the door, sir!"—sternly uttered. The door was shut, and the libeller stood trembling before the libelled. He told his tale, and produced his certificate, which was instantly clutched by the injured merchant. "You wrote a pamphlet against us once!" exclaimed Mr. Grant. The supplicant expected to see his parchment thrown into the fire. But this was not its destination. Mr. Grant took a pen, and writing something upon the document, handed it back to the bankrupt. He, poor wretch, expected to see "rogue, scoundrel, libeller," inscribed, but there was, in fair round characters, the signature of the firm.

4. "We make it a rule," said Mr. Grant, "never to refuse signing the certificate of an honest tradesman, and we have never heard that you were any thing else." The tears started into the poor man's eyes. "Ah," said Mr. Grant, "my saying was true. I said you would live to repent writing the pamphlet. I did not mean it as a threat. I only meant that some day you would know us better, and be sorry you had tried to injure us. I see you repent of it now." "I do, do!" said the grateful man. "I bitterly repent it." "Well, my dear fellow, you know us now. How do you get on? What are you going to do?" The poor man stated that friends who could assist him when his certificate was obtained. "But how are you off in the mean time?" And the answer was, that, having given up every farthing to his creditors, he had been compelled to stint his family even common necessities, that he might be enabled to pay the cost of his certificate. "My dear fellow, this will not do; your family must not suffer. Be kind enough to take this pound note to your wife from me. There, there, my dear fellow! Nay, don't cry; it will be all well with you yet. Cheer up your spirits, set to work like a man, and you will be your head among us yet." The overpowered man endeavored in vain to express his thanks: the swelling in his throat forbade words. He put his handkerchief to his face, and went out of the door crying like a child.

139. WHO IS MY NEIGHBOR?

ANON.

1. THY neighbor? It is he whom thou
 Hast power to aid and bless :
 Whose aching heart and burning brow
 Thy soothing heart may press.

- Thy neighbor? 'Tis the fainting poor,
 Whose eye with want is dim ;
 Whom hunger sends from door to door ;
 Go thou and comfort him.

2. Thy neighbor? 'Tis that weary man,
 Whose years are at their brim,
 Bent low with sickness, cares, and pain ;
 Go thou and comfort him.

- Thy neighbor? 'Tis the heart bereft
 Of every earthly gem ;

Widow and orphan, helpless left ;
Go thou and shelter them.

3. Thy neighbor ? Yonder toiling slave,
Fetter'd in thought and limb,
Whose hopes are all beyond the grave ;
Go thou and ransom him.

Whene'er thou meet'st a human form
Less favor'd than thine own,
Remember 'tis thy neighbor worm,
Thy brother, or thy son.

4. Oh ! pass not, pass not heedless by ;
Perhaps thou canst redeem
The breaking heart from misery ;
Go share thy lot with him.

140. EDWIN, KING OF NORTHUMBRIA.

LINGARD.

1. ATTENDED by Paulinus, he entered the great council, requested the advice of his faithful witan, and exposed to them the reasons which induced him to prefer Christianity to the worship of paganism. Coiffi, the high priest of Northumbria, was the first to reply. It might have been expected, that prejudice and interest would have armed him with arguments against the adoption of a foreign creed ; but his attachment to paganism had been weakened by repeated disappointments, and he had learnt to despise the gods who had neglected to reward his services.

2. That the religion which he had hitherto taught was false, he attempted to prove from his own misfortunes ; he avowed his resolution to listen to the reasons and examine the doctrine of Paulinus. He was followed by an aged theologist whose discourse offers an interesting picture of the simple

f the age. "When," said he, "O king, you and your ministers are seated at table in the depth of winter, and the cheerful fire blazes on the hearth in the middle of the hall, a sparrow perhaps, chased by the wind and snow, enters at one door of the apartment, and escapes by the other.

3. "During the moment of its passage, it enjoys the warmth; when it is once departed, it is seen no more. Such is the nature of man. During a few years his existence is visible; but what has preceded, or what will follow it, is concealed from the view of mortals. If the new religion offers any information on subjects so mysterious and important, it must be worthy of our attention." To these reasons the other members assented.

4. Paulinus was desired to explain the principal articles of the Christian faith; and the king expressed his determination to embrace the doctrine of the missionary. When it was asked, who would dare to profane the altars of Woden, Coiffi accepted the dangerous office. Laying aside the emblems of the priestly dignity, he assumed the dress of a warrior; and despising the prohibitions of Saxon superstition, mounted the favorite charger of Edwin. By those who were ignorant of his motives, his conduct was attributed to temporary insanity.

5. But disregarding their clamors, he proceeded to the nearest temple, and bidding defiance to the gods of his fathers, hurled his spear into the sacred edifice. It stuck in the opposite wall; and, to the surprise of the trembling spectators, the heavens were silent, and the sacrilege was unpunished. Sensibly they recovered their fears, and, encouraged by the exhortations of Coiffi, burnt to the ground the temple and the surrounding groves.

141. CLEANLINESS.

ADDISON.

1. CLEANLINESS may be defined to be the emblem of purity of mind, and may be recommended under the three following heads : as it is a mark of politeness, as it produces affection, and as it bears analogy to chastity of sentiment. First, it is a mark of politeness, for it is universally agreed upon, that no one unadorned with this virtue, can go into company without giving a manifold offence ; the different nations of the world are as much distinguished by their cleanliness, as by their arts and sciences ; the more they are advanced in civilization, the more they consult this part of politeness.

2. Secondly, cleanliness may be said to be the foster-mother of affection. Beauty commonly produces love, but cleanliness preserves it. Age, itself, is not unamiable while it is preserved clean and unsullied ; like a piece of metal constantly kept smooth and bright, we look on it with more pleasure than on a new vessel cankered with rust. I might further observe, that as cleanliness renders us agreeable to others, it makes us easy to ourselves ; that it is an excellent preservative of health ; and that several vices, both of mind and body, are inconsistent with the habit of it.

3. In the third place, it bears a great analogy with chastity of sentiment, and naturally inspires refined feelings and passions ; we find from experience, that through the prevalence of custom, the most vicious actions lose their horror by being made familiar to us. On the contrary, those who live in the neighborhood of good examples, fly from the first appearance of what is shocking : and thus pure and unsullied thoughts are naturally suggested to the mind, by those objects that perpetually encompass us when they are beautiful and elegant of their kind.

4. In the East, where the warmth of the climate makes cleanliness more immediately necessary than in colder countries, it is a part of religion ; the Jewish law (as well as the Mohammedan, which in some things copies after it), is full th bathings, purifications, and other rites of the like nature ; and we read several injunctions of this kind in the Book of Deuteronomy.

142. THERE WERE MERRY DAYS IN ENGLAND.

J. E. CARPENTER.

"Go call thy sons : instruct them what a debt
 They owe their ancestors ; and make them swear
 To pay it—by transmitting down entire Those sacred rights to which themselves were born."

AKENSIDE.

THERE were merry days in England—and a blush is on my brow,

When I think of what our land has been, and what our homes are now ;

When our peasantry and artisans were good as well as brave,

And mildly heard the blessed truths the old religion gave.

There were merry days in England when a common lot we felt,

When at one shrine, and in one faith, the peer and peasant knelt ;

A faith that link'd in holy bonds the cottage and the throne,

Before a thousand priests uprose—with each a creed—his own !

There were merry days in England, when on the village
 green,

The good old pastor that they loved, amid his flock was seen ;

The parish church, that, even then, had seen an earlier
 day,

There only, like their forefathers, the people went to pray.

There were merry days in England—now mark the Sabbath
day,
How many scoff the fanes wherein their good forefathers
lay ;
Some “new light” glitters in their path—but let the truth be told,
And who can say he’s happier now than those who lived of old ?

3. There were merry days in England—ere England’s direst foes
To clamor forth sedition, in their wickedness arose ;
To riot in the scenes from which, once, Britons would recoil ;
To wreck a thousand hearths and homes, and—fatten on the spoil !

There were merry days in England—ere those traitors
snapp’d the chord—
The bond of faith and truth that bound the poor man to the lord ;
When the people loved their rulers, their religion, and their laws,
And the welfare of the nation was to all a sacred cause.

4. There were merry days in England—there were joys never knew,
Ere our poor men were so many, and our rich men were few ;
When by honor and integrity our sires would stand
fall—
Before the great King MAMMON was the king that govern all !

143. MEMORY AND HOPE.

PAULDING.

JAMES KIRKE PAULDING, born at Pawlings, on the Hudson, in 1779. Paulding's writings are voluminous, and many of them of great interest. The best known, are "The Dutchman's Fireside," and "Westward Ho!"

HOPE is the leading-string of youth; memory the staff of age. Yet, for a long time they were at variance, and scarcely ever associated together. Memory was almost always grave, stern, sad and melancholy. She delighted in silence and repose, in the woods and rocks and waterfalls; and whenever she raised her eyes from the ground, it was only to look back over her shoulder. Hope was a smiling, dancing, rosy boy, with sparkling eyes, and it was impossible to look upon him without being inspired by his gay and sprightly buoyancy. Wherever he went, he infused gladness and joy around him; the eyes of the young sparkled brighter than ever at his approach; old age, as it cast its dim glances at the blue vault of heaven, seemed infused with new vigor; the flowers looked more gay, the grass more green, the birds sung more cheerily, and all nature seemed to sympathize in his gladness. Memory was of mortal birth, but Hope partook of immortality.

One day they chanced to meet, and Memory reproached Hope with being a deceiver. She charged him with deluding mankind with visionary, impracticable schemes, and exciting expectations that led only to disappointment and regret; with being the ignis fatuus of youth, and the scourge of old age. Hope cast back upon her the charge of deceit, and maintained that the pictures of the past were as much exaggerated by Memory, as were the anticipations of Hope. He declared that when she looked at objects at a great distance in the past, he looked at objects at a great distance in the future, and that this distance magnified every thing. "Let us make the circuit of the world," said he, "and try the experiment." Memory reluctantly consented, and they went on their way together.

The first person they met was a school-boy, lounging along, and stopping every moment to gaze around, as if unwilling to proceed on his way. By and by, he sat down, and burst into tears. "Whither so fast, my good lad?" asked Hope, jeeringly. "I am going to school," replied the lad, "to study, when I would rather, a thousand times, be at play; and sit on a bench with a book in my hand, while I long to be sporting in the fields. But never mind, I shall be a man soon, and then I shall be as free as the air." Saying this, he skipped away merrily in the hope of soon being a man. "It is thus you play upon the inexperience of youth," said Memory, reproachfully.

4. Passing onward, they met a beautiful girl, pacing slowly and with a melancholy air, behind a party of gay young men and maidens, who walked arm in arm with each other, and were flirting and exchanging all those little harmless courtesies which nature prompts on such occasions. They were all gayly dressed in silks and ribbons; but the little girl had on a simple frock, a homely apron, and clumsy, thick-soled shoes. "Why do you not join yonder group," asked Hope, "and partake in their gayety, my pretty little girl?" "Alas!" replied she, "they take no notice of me. They call me a child. But I shall soon be a woman, and then I shall be so happy!" Inspired by this hope, she quickened her pace, and soon was seen dancing along merrily with the rest.

5. In this manner they wended their way from nation to nation, and clime to clime, until they had made the circuit of the universe. Wherever they came they found the human race, who, at this time, were all young (it being not many years since the first creation of mankind), repining at the present, and looking forward to a riper age for happiness. All anticipated some future good, and Memory had scarcely any thing to do but cast looks of reproach at her young companion.

6. "Let us return home," said she, "to that delightful spot where I first drew my breath. I long to repose among its beautiful bowers; to listen to the brooks that murmur a thousand times more musically; to the birds that sing a thousand times more sweetly; and to the echoes that whisper softer than any I have since heard. Ah! there is nothing on earth so enchanting as the scenes of my early youth!" Hope indulged himself in a sly, significant smile, and they proceeded on their return home.

7. As they journeyed but slowly, many years elapsed ere they approached the spot from which they had departed. It happened one day, that they met an old man, bending under the weight of years, and walking with trembling steps, leaning on his staff. Memory at once recognized him as the youth they had seen going to school, on their first onset in the tour of the world. As they came nearer, the old man leaned on his staff, and looking at Hope, who, being immortal, was still a blithe, young boy, sighed, as if his heart was breaking. "What aileth thee, old man?" asked the youth. "What aileth me?" he replied, in a feeble, faltering voice. "What could ail me, but old age? I have outlived my health and strength; I have survived all that was near and dear; I have seen all that I loved, or that loved me, struck down to the earth like dead leaves in autumn; and now I stand like an old tree, withering, alone in the world, without roots, without branches, and without verdure. I have only just enough of sensation to know that I am miserable, and the recollection of the happiness of my youthful days, when, careless and full of blissful anticipations, I was a laughing, merry boy, only adds to the miseries I now endure."

8. "Behold!" said Memory, "the consequence of thy deceptions," and she looked reproachfully at her companion. "Behold!" replied Hope, "the deception practised by thyself. Thou persuadest him that he was happy in his youth. Dost thou remember the boy we met when we first set out together, who was weeping on his way to school, and sighed to a man?" Memory cast down her eyes, and was silent.

9. A little way onward they came to a miserable cottage, the door of which was an aged woman, meanly clad, and shaking with palsy. She sat all alone, her head resting on her bosom, and, as the pair approached, vainly tried to raise it up to look at them. "Good-morrow, old lady, and all happiness to you," cried Hope, gayly, and the old woman thought it was a long time since she had heard such a cheering salutation. "Happiness!" said she, in a voice that quivered with weakness and infirmity. "Happiness! I have not known it since I was a little girl, without care or sorrow. Oh, I remember those delightful days, when I thought of nothing but the present moment, nor cared for the future or the past. When I laughed, and played, and sung, from morning till night, and envied no one, and wished to be no other than I was. But those happy times are passed, never to return. Oh, could I but once more return to the days of my childhood!" The old woman sunk back on her seat, and the tears flowed from her hollow eyes. Memory again reproached her companion, but he only asked her if she recollected the little girl they had met a long time ago, who was so miserable because she was so young? Memory knew it well enough, and said not another word.

10. They now approached their home, and Memory was on tiptoe with the thought of once more enjoying the unequalled beauties of those scenes from which she had been so long separated. But, some how or other, it seemed that they were sadly changed. Neither the grass was so green, the flowers so sweet and lovely, nor did the brooks murmur, the echoes answer, nor the birds sing half so enchantingly, as she remembered them in time past. "Alas!" she exclaimed, "how changed is every thing! I alone am the same!" "Every thing is the same, and thou alone art changed," answered Hope. "Thou hast deceived thyself in the past, just as much as I deceive others in the future."

11. "What are you disputing about?" asked an old man, whom they had not observed before, though he was standing close by them. "I have lived almost fourscore and ten years, and my experience may, perhaps, enable me to decide between you." They told him the occasion of their disagreement, and related the history of their journey round the earth. The old man smiled, and, for a few moments, sat buried in thought. He then said to them: "I, too, have lived to see all the hopes of my youth turn into shadows, clouds, and darkness, and vanish into nothing. I, too, have survived my fortune, my friends, my children; the hilarity of youth, and the blessing of health." "And dost thou not despair?" said Memory. "No have still one hope left me." "And what is that?" "The hope of heaven!"

12. Memory turned towards Hope, threw herself into his arms, which opened to receive her, and, bursting into tears, exclaimed: "Forgive me, I have done thee injustice. Let us never again separate from each other." "With all my heart," said Hope, and they continued forever after to travel together, hand in hand, through the world.

144. LOVE OF COUNTRY.

SCOTT.

1. BREATHES there the man, with soul so dead,
 Who never to himself hath said,
 "This is my own, my native land!"
 Whose heart has ne'er within him burn'd,
 As home his footsteps he hath turn'd,
 From wandering on a foreign strand?
 If such there breathe, go, mark him well;
 For him no minstrel raptures swell:

* * * * *

2. High though his titles, proud his name,
 Boundless his wealth as wish can claim;
 Despite those titles, power, and pelf,
 The wretch, concentred all in self,
 Living, shall forfeit fair renown;
 And, doubly dying, shall go down
 To the vile dust from which he sprung,
 Unwept, unhonor'd, and unsung.

3. O Caledonia! stern and wild,
 Meet nurse for a poetic child
 Land of brown heath and shaggy wood
 Land of the mountain and the flood.

Land of my sires ; what mortal hand
Can e'er untie the filial band,
That knits me to thy ragged strand !

145. THE CHARMED SERPENT.

CHATEAUBRIAND.

FRANCOIS AUGUSTE, VICOMTE DE CHATEAUBRIAND, born at St. Malo, France, in 1768 ; died in 1848. The name of Chateaubriand is one of those of which France will ever be justly proud. His writings are among the first of the modern French classics, and belong to a period which may be called the Christian Revival in France. His greatest works are the "Genius of Christianity," and "The Martyrs." Among his other literary achievements, Chateaubriand translated Milton's "Paradise Lost," into French.

1. ONE day, while we were encamped in a spacious plain on the bank of the Genesee River, we saw a rattlesnake. There was a Canadian in our party who could play on the flute, and to divert us he advanced toward the serpent with his new species of weapon. On the approach of his enemy, the haughty reptile curls himself into a spiral line, flattens his head, inflates his cheeks, contracts his lips, displays his envenomed fangs and his bloody throat. His double tongue glows like two flames of fire ; his eyes are burning coals ; his body swollen with rage, rises and falls like the bellows of a forge ; his dilated skin assumes a dull and scaly appearance ; and his tail, which sends forth an ominous sound, vibrates with such rapidity as to resemble a light vapor.

2. The Canadian now begins to play on his flute. The serpent starts with surprise and draws back his head. In proportion as he is struck with the magic sound, his eyes lose their fierceness, the oscillations of his tail diminish, and the noise which it emits grows weaker, and gradually dies away. The spiral folds of the charmed serpent, diverging from the perpendicular, expand, and one after the other sink to the ground in concentric circles. The tints of azure, green, white and gold, recover their brilliancy on his quivering skin, and slightly turning his head, he remains motionless in the attitude of attention and pleasure.

3. At this moment the Canadian advanced a few steps, producing with his flute sweet and simple notes. The reptile immediately lowers his variegated neck, opens a passage with his head through the slender grass, and begins to creep after the musician, halting when he halts, and again following him when he resumes his march. In this way he was led beyond the limits of our camp, attended by a great number of spectators, both savages and Europeans, who could scarcely believe their eyes. After witnessing this wonderful effect of melody, the assembly unanimously decided that the marvellous serpent should be permitted to escape.

146. TWO VIEWS OF NATURE.

CHATEAUBRIAND.

1. WE often rose at midnight and sat down upon deck, where we found only the officer of the watch and a few sailors silently smoking their pipes. No noise was heard, save the dashing of the prow through the billows, while sparks of fire ran with a white foam along the sides of the vessel. God of Christians! it is on the waters of the abyss and on the vast expanse of the heavens that thou hast particularly engraven the characters of thy omnipotence! Millions of stars sparkling in the azure of the celestial dome—the moon in the midst of the firmament—a sea unbounded by any shore—infinity in the skies and on the waves—proclaim with most impressive effect the power of thy arm! Never did thy greatness strike me with profounder awe than in those nights, when, suspended between the stars and the ocean, I beheld immensity over my head and immensity beneath my feet!

2. I am nothing; I am only a simple, solitary wanderer, and often have I heard men of science disputing on the subject of a Supreme Being, without understanding them; but I have invariably remarked, that it is in the prospect of the sublime scenes of nature that this unknown Being manifests himself to the human heart. One evening, after we had reached the beautiful waters that bathe the shores of Virginia, there was a profound calm, and every sail was furled. I was engaged below, when I heard the bell that summoned the crew to prayers. I hastened to mingle my supplications with those of my travelling companions. The officers of the ship were on the quarter-deck with the passengers, while the chaplain, with a book in his hand, was stationed at a little distance before them; the seamen were scattered at random over the poop; we were all standing, our faces toward the prow of the vessel, which was turned to the west.

3. The solar orb, about to sink beneath the waves, was seen through the rigging, in the midst of boundless space; and, from the motion of the stern, it appeared as if it changed its horizon every moment. A few clouds wandered confusedly in the east, where the moon was slowly rising. The rest of the sky was serene; and toward the north, a water-spout, forming a glorious triangle with the luminaries of day and night, and glistening with all the colors of the prism, rose from the sea, like a column of crystal supporting the vault of heaven.

4. He had been well deserving of pity who would not have recognized in this prospect the beauty of God. When my companions, doffing their tarpaulin hats, intoned with hoarse voice their simple hymn to Our Lady of Good Help, the patroness of the seas, the tears flowed from my eyes in spite of myself. How affecting was the prayer of those men, who, from a frail plank in the midst of the ocean, contemplated the sun setting behind the waves!

5. How the appeal of the poor sailor to the Mother of Sorrows went to the heart! The consciousness of our insignificance in the presence of the Infinite,—our hymns, resounding to a distance over the silent waves,—the night approaching with its dangers,—our vessel, itself a wonder among so many wonders, a religious crew, penetrated with admiration and with awe,—a venerable priest in prayer,—the Almighty bending over the abyss, with one hand staying the sun in the west, with the other raising the moon in the east, and lending, through all immensity, an attentive ear to the feeble voice of his creatures,—all this constituted a scene which no power of art can represent, and which it is scarcely possible for the heart of man to feel.

6. Let us now pass to the terrestrial scene.

I had wandered one evening in the woods, at some distance from the cataract of Niagara, when soon the last glimmering of daylight disappeared, and I enjoyed, in all its loneliness, the beauteous prospect of night amid the deserts of the New World.

7. An hour after sunset, the moon appeared above the trees in the opposite part of the heavens. A balmy breeze, which the queen of night had brought with her from the east, seemed to precede her in the forests, like her perfumed breath. The lonely luminary slowly ascended in the firmament, now peacefully pursuing her azure course, and now reposing on groups of clouds which resembled the summits of lofty, snow-covered mountains. These clouds, by the contraction and expansion of their vapory forms, rolled themselves into transparent zones of white satin, scattering in airy masses of foam, forming in the heavens brilliant beds of down so lovely to the eye that you would have imagined you felt their softness and elasticity.

8. The scenery on the earth was not less enchanting: the soft and bluish beams of the moon darted through the intervals between the trees, and threw streams of light into the midst of the most profound darkness. The river that glided by my feet was now lost in the wood, and now reappearing, listening with the constellations of night, which were reflected on its bosom. In a vast plain beyond this stream, the radiance of the moon reposed quietly on the verdure.

9. Birch-trees, scattered here and there in the savanna, and agitated by the breeze, formed shadowy islands which floated in a motionless sea of light. Near me, all was silence and repose, save the fall of some leaf, the transient rustling of a golden breath of wind, or the hooting of the owl; but at a distance was heard, at intervals, the solemn roar of the Falls of Niagara, which in the stillness of the night, was prolonged from desert to desert, and died away among the solitary forests.

10. The grandeur, the astonishing solemnity of the scene, cannot be expressed in language ; nor can the most delightful nights of Europe afford any idea of it. In vain does imagination attempt to soar in our cultivated fields ; it everywhere meets with the habitations of men : but in those wild regions the mind loves to penetrate into an ocean of forests, to hover round the abysses of cataracts, to meditate on the banks of lakes and rivers, and, as it were, to find itself alone with God.

147. THE HOLY WELLS OF IRELAND.

FRASER.

JOHN FRASER, more generally known by his nom de plume, "J. De Jean," was born near Birr, in King's county, on the banks of the river Brosna and died in Dublin in 1849, about 40 years of age. He was an artisan—a cabinet-maker ; a steady and unassuming workman,—enjoying the respect of his fellow-workmen, and the friendship of those to whom he was known by his literary and poetic talents. He possessed much mental power,—and had his means permitted him to cultivate and refine his poetic mind, he would have occupied a higher position as a poet than is now allotted him. As it is, he has clothed noble thoughts in terse and harmonious language ; in his descriptive ballads he depicts, in vivid colors, the scenery of his native district, with all the natural fondness of one describing scenes hallowed by memories of childhood and maturer years.

1. THE holy wells—the living wells—the cool, the fresh, the pure—

A thousand ages roll'd away, and still those founts endure,
As full and sparkling as they flow'd, ere slave or tyrant trod

The emerald garden set apart for Irishmen by God !
And while their stainless chastity and lasting life have birth,
Amid the oozy cells and caves of gross, material earth,
The scripture of creation holds no fairer type than they—
That an immortal spirit can be link'd with human clay !

2. How sweet, of old,* the bubbling gush—no less to antlered race,

Than to the hunter, and the hound, that smote them in the chase !

In forest depths the water-fount beguiled the Druid's love,
From that celestial fount of fire which warm'd from worlds
above ;

Inspired apostles took it for a centre to the ring,
When sprinkling round baptismal life—salvation—from the spring ;

And in the sylvan solitude, or lonely mountain cave,
Beside it pass'd the hermit's life, as stainless as its wave.

The cottage hearth, the convent wall, the battlemented tower,

Grew up around the crystal springs, as well as flag and flower ;

The brooklime and the water-cress were evidence of health,
Abiding in those basins, free to poverty and wealth :

The city sent pale sufferers there the faded brow to dip,

And woo the water to depose some bloom upon the lip ;

The wounded warrior dragged him towards the unforgotten tide;

And deemed the draught a heavenlier gift than triumph to his side.

The stag, the hunter, and the hound, the Druid and the saint,

And anchorite are gone, and even the lineaments grown faint,

Of those old ruins, into which, for monuments had sunk

The glorious homes that held, like shrines, the monarch and the monk ;

So far into the heights of God the mind of man has ranged,

It learn'd a lore to change the earth—its very self it changed

To some more bright intelligence ; yet still the springs endure,

The same fresh fountains, but become more precious to the poor !

For knowledge has abused its powers, an empire to erect

For tyrants, on the rights the poor had given them to protect ;

Till now the simple elements of nature are their all,
That from the cabin is not filch'd, and lavish'd in the hall—
And while night, noon, or morning meal no other plenty brings,

No beverage than the water draught from old, spontaneous
springs,

They, sure, may deem them holy wells, that yield, from day
to day,

One blessing which no tyrant hand can taint, or take away.

148. WANTS.

PAULDING.

1. EVERYBODY, young and old, children and graybeards, has heard of the renowned Haroun Al Raschid, the hero of Eastern history and Eastern romance, and the most illustrious of the caliphs of Bagdad, that famous city on which the light of learning and science shone, long ere it dawned on the benighted regions of Europe, which has since succeeded to the diadem that once glittered on the brow of Asia. Though as the successor of the Prophet he exercised a despotic sway over the lives and fortunes of his subjects, yet did he not, like the Eastern despots of more modern times, shut himself up within the walls of his palace, hearing nothing but the adulation of his dependants ; seeing nothing but the shadows which surrounded him ; and knowing nothing but what he received through the medium of interested deception or malignant falsehood.

2. That he might see with his own eyes, and hear with his own ears, he was accustomed to go about through the streets of Bagdad by night, in disguise, accompanied by Giafer the Barmecide, his grand vizier, and Mesrour, his executioner ; one to give him his counsel, the other to fulfil his command promptly, on all occasions. If he saw any commotion among the people, he mixed with them and learned its cause ; and in passing a house he heard the moanings of distress, or the complaints of suffering, he entered, for the purpose of administering relief. Thus he made himself acquainted with the condition of his subjects, and often heard those salutary truths which never reached his ears through the walls of his palace, or from the lips of the slaves that surrounded him.

3. On one of these occasions, as Al Raschid was thus perambulating the streets at night, in disguise, accompanied by his vizier and his executioner, in passing a splendid mansion he overheard, through the lattice of a window, the complaints of some one who seemed in the deepest distress, and silently approaching, looked into an apartment exhibiting all the signs of wealth and luxury. On a sofa of satin embroidered with gold, and sparkling with brilliant gems, he beheld a man richly dressed, in whom he recognized his favorite boon companion Bedreddin, on whom he had showered wealth and honors with more than Eastern prodigality. He was stretched out on the sofa, slapping his forehead, tearing his beard, and moaning piteously, as if in the extremity of suffering. At length, starting up on his feet, he exclaimed in tones of despair, "O Allah! I beseech thee to relieve me from my misery, and take away my life!"

4. The Commander of the Faithful, who loved Bedreddin, pitied his sorrows, and being desirous to know their cause, that he might relieve them, knocked at the door, which was opened by a black slave, who, on being informed that they were strangers in want of food and rest, at once admitted them, and informed his master, who called them into his presence and bade them welcome. A plentiful feast was spread before them, at which the master of the house sat down with his guests, but of which he did not partake, but looked on, sighing bitterly all the while.

5. The Commander of the Faithful at length ventured to ask him what caused his distress, and why he refrained from partaking in the feast with his guests, in proof that they were welcome. "Hath Allah afflicted thee with disease, that thou canst not enjoy the blessings he has bestowed? Thou art surrounded by all the splendor that wealth can procure; thy dwelling is a palace, and its apartments are adorned with all the luxuries which captivate the eye, or administer to the gratification of the senses. Why is it then, O my brother, that thou art miserable?"

6. "True, O stranger!" replied Bedreddin. "I have all these. I have health of body; I am rich enough to purchase all that wealth can bestow, and if I required more wealth and honors, I am the favorite companion of the Commander of the Faithful, on whose head lie the blessings of Allah, and of whom I have only to ask, to obtain all I desire, save one thing only."

7. "And what is that?" asked the caliph. "Alas! I adore the beautiful Zuleima, whose face is like the full moon, whose eyes are brighter and softer than those of the gazelle, and whose mouth is like the seal of Solomon. But she loves another, and all my wealth and honors are as nothing. The want of one thing renders the possession of every other of no value. I am the most wretched of men; my life is a burden, and my death would be a blessing."

8. "By the beard of the Prophet," cried the caliph, "I swear thy case is a hard one. But Allah is great and powerful, and will, I trust, either deliver thee from thy burden, or give thee strength to bear it." Then thanking Bedreddin for his hospitality, the Commander of the Faithful departed with his companions.

149. WANTS—continued.

1. TAKING their way toward that part of the city inhabited by the poorer classes of people, the caliph stumbled over something, in the obscurity of night, and was nigh falling to the ground: at the same moment a voice cried out, "Allah preserve me! Am I not wretched enough already, that must be trodden under foot by a wandering beggar like myself, in the darkness of night!"

2. Mezrour the executioner, indignant at this insult to the Commander of the Faithful, was preparing to cut off his head when Al Raschid interposed, and inquired of the beggar his name, and why he was there sleeping in the streets at that hour of the night.

"Mashallah," replied he, "I sleep in the street because I have nowhere else to sleep ; and if I lie on a satin sofa, my pains and infirmities would rob me of rest. Whether on divans of silk, or in the dirt, all one to me, for neither by day nor by night do I know any rest. If I close my eyes for a moment, my dreams are of nothing but feasting, and I awake only to feel more bitterly the pangs of hunger and disease."

3. "Hast thou no home to shelter thee, no friends or kindred to relieve thy necessities, or administer to thy infirmities?"

"No," replied the beggar; "my house was consumed by fire; my kindred are all dead, and my friends have deserted me. Alas ! stranger, I am in want of every thing—health, food, clothing, home, kindred, and friends. I am the most wretched of mankind, and death alone can relieve me."

4. "Of one thing, at least, I can relieve thee," said the caliph, giving him his purse. "Go and provide thyself food and shelter, and may Allah restore thy health."

The beggar took the purse, but instead of calling down blessings on the head of his benefactor, exclaimed, "Of what use is money? it cannot cure disease;" and the caliph again went on his way with Giafer his vizier, and Mesrour his executioner.

5. Passing from the abodes of want and misery, they at length reached a splendid palace, and seeing lights glimmering from the windows, the caliph approached, and looking through the silken curtains, beheld a man walking backward and forward, with languid step, as if oppressed with a load of cares. At length, casting himself down on a sofa, he stretched out his limbs, and yawning desperately, exclaimed, "O Allah ! what shall I do ! what will become of me ! I am weary of life ; it is nothing but a cheat, promising what it never purpposes, and affording only hopes that end in disappointment, or, if realized, only in disgust."

6. The curiosity of the caliph being awakened to know the cause of his despair, he ordered Mesrour to knock at the door; which being opened, they pleaded the privilege of strangers to enter for rest and refreshments. Again, in accordance with the precepts of the Koran and the customs of the East, the strangers were admitted to the presence of the lord of the palace, who received them with welcome, and directed refreshments to be brought. But though he treated his guests with kindness, he neither sat down with them, nor asked any questions, nor joined in their discourse, walking back and forth languidly, and seeming oppressed with a heavy burden of sorrows.

7. At length the caliph approached him reverently, and said: "Thou seemest sorrowful, O my brother! If thy suffering is of the body, I am a physician, and peradventure can afford thee relief; for I have travelled into distant lands, and collected very choice remedies for human infirmity."

"My sufferings are not of the body, but of the mind," answered the other.

"Hast thou lost the beloved of thy heart, the friend of thy bosom, or been disappointed in the attainment of that on which thou hast rested all thy hopes of happiness?"

8. "Alas! no. I have been disappointed, not in the means, but in the attainment of happiness. I want nothing but a want. I am cursed with the gratification of all my wishes, and the fruition of all my hopes. I have wasted my life in the acquisition of riches that only awakened new desires, and honors that no longer gratify my pride or repay me for the labor of sustaining them. I have been cheated in the pursuit of pleasures that weary me in the enjoyment, and am perishing for lack of the excitement of some new want. I have every thing I wish, yet enjoy nothing."

9. "Thy case is beyond my skill," replied the caliph; and the man cursed with the fruition of all his desires turned his back on him in despair. The caliph, after thanking him for his hospitality, departed with his companions, and when they had reached the street, exclaimed—

"Allah, preserve me! I will no longer fatigue myself in a vain pursuit, for it is impossible to confer happiness on such a perverse generation. I see it is all the same, whether a man wants one thing, every thing, or nothing. Let us go home and sleep."

150. VESUVIUS AND THE BAY OF NAPLES.

HASKINS.

REV. GEORGE FOXCROFT HASKINS, Rector of the House of the Angel Guardian, Boston. Mr. Haskins is a native of New England, and a convert to the Catholic faith. To his piety and zeal the Catholics of Boston are indebted for that truly valuable asylum for boys, the House of the Angel Guardian. His "Travels in England, France, Italy, and Ireland," is a pleasing and well-written volume, furnishing some interesting views of men and things in the countries visited by him.

1. ONE of our first promenades, after our arrival in Naples, was along the quay, in order to catch a distant view of Mount Vesuvius. There it was in all its grandeur, vomiting forth that eternal column of smoke; and as I stood contemplating it, I remembered well the feelings with which, many and many a time while I was a boy, I had read and heard of that same Vesuvius, and of its dreadful eruptions, and of the destruction of Pompeii and Herculaneum, and had in imagination seen the fiery floods, and the ashes, and the darkness, and felt the trembling of the earth, and fled with the terrified inhabitants.

2. Little did I then think that these eyes would ever behold that mount, or these feet stand on flags of that lava that had buried Herculaneum; yet here I was, traversing streets entirely paved with that same lava, and there, directly before me, in solemn grandeur, stood that same mountain caldron that had boiled over and ejected it. The evening was warm, and the sky serene and almost cloudless; and desirous of seeing the bay and mountain to greater advantage, we stepped into a boat, and bade the boatman row us off for one hour.

3. We glided softly over the glassy surface of the bay for that space of time, and then, having turned our boat's head towards Naples, we contemplated the scene before us with sentiments of admiration altogether indescribable. The sun was just setting in all that blaze of splendor so peculiar to an Italian sunset. There were a few long, narrow strips of cloud above the horizon, just sufficient to catch and retain the richest of his tints.

4. The deep colorings and changing hues that melted one into the other, and cast their declining radiance on the bosom of the waters, and the peculiar transparency of the deep blue vault above, convinced me of that which before I never believed—that in an Italian sky and sunset there is something surpassingly beautiful, and such as is never witnessed elsewhere. The sunset, however, was not all. We were in the Bay of Naples, the most magnificent in the world. Before us was that vast and beautiful city itself, numbering four hundred thousand inhabitants, forming a splendid amphitheatre. Its elegant quay, its castles, its palaces, its domes and minarets, fringed with sunset hues, afforded a spectacle of extraordinary beauty.

5. On the right, at the distance of about six miles, rose Vesuvius, the sun shining on its summit, and reddening with a fiery glow the volumes of smoke that were rolling perpendicularly from its mysterious crater. On the wide-extended plain at its foot, and within sight, lay those hapless cities that have so often and so fatally witnessed its terrible and devastating eruptions. There was Torre del Greco, that about fifty years since was completely buried with lava, and Portici, and Resina, and Torre del Annunciata. There also were Herculaneum and Pompeii, whose sad history is but too well known to all.

6. On the left rose the craggy promontory of Pausilippo, and farther distant that of Miseno, and the towns of Pozzuoli and Baia. There were also in view the islands of Ischia and Procida, and Capri and Nisida. All was classic ground, and each spot remarkable for some heroic achievement, or venerable as a site of a people long since extinct. We glided homeward in silence, and the regular stroke of the oars beat time to our meditations. About an hour after sunset we landed on the quay.

151. IRELAND.

HASKINS.

1. ON the evening of the 24th day of July, we took passage to Liverpool, in the steamer "Iron Duke," for Dublin, where we arrived on the morning of the 25th. It was a lovely morning: the sun was shining brightly, illumining with pencil of fire the turrets, cottages, and princely mansions on either shore, and gilding with its mysterious tints the hill of Howth on one side, and the mountains of Wicklow on the other. There is not perhaps a bay in the world, if we except that of Naples, that is so beautiful, and altogether lovely, as the bay of Dublin. It is, moreover, vast, commodious, and perfectly safe. Frigates and merchantmen of the largest size, and yachts beautiful and buoyant as swans, may ride securely on the bosom of its waters.

2. As I stood on the deck of the Iron Duke, inhaling the fragrant land-breeze that rippled the glassy surface of the bay, thoughts kept crowding and crowding upon me—thoughts which could not banish if I would, and would not if I could. Not much the surpassing beauties of Dublin Bay; not the lordly hill of Howth, and the glens and mountains of Wicklow, and the distant hills and verdant vales of Meath; not the islands, and bluffs, and friendly lighthouses along the coast; not the parks and gardens, that grew every instant more distinct and beautiful as we bowled along; not the sandy beach, hard and clean as tidy housewife's floor; nor steep banks and stately promontories; not these, I say, so much engrossed my mind, but the single, solitary fact, that I was now at last, in good, glorious old Ireland.

3. Ireland, all hail! Thou art to me no stranger. How well I know thee. I have known and honored thee from my earliest childhood. Well do I remember the delight with which I read, and the ardor with which I learned, the speeches of thy orators, statesmen, and patriots—of Burke, Grattan, and Curran, and Sheridan, and Emmet, and Russell, and Phillips; and how afterwards, a student in a Protestant college, I gloated over the works of Dean Swift, and Sterne, and Tom Moore; and sympathized with thy bravest sons, in their repeated struggles for freedom; and admired the exploits of thy warriors and men-at-arms—thy Brian Borimhes, and Malachys, and O'Briens, and O'Neils, and Sarsfields, and McCarthys, and Fitzgeralds, and O'Reillys.

4. Never can I forget the little Irish boy, my own pupil, who, in exchange for the letters I taught him, first taught me Christianity; nor the Irish servant in my paternal mansion, who first made me acquainted with a Catholic priest—the Rev. Mr. Taylor, whose memory is venerated in Boston; nor the Irishman in my father's employ, who lent me Catholic books and a Catholic paper, printed in Hartford, and in whose house I made the acquaintance of the late William Wiley, who afterwards became my spiritual counsellor and father, and received me into the bosom of the Catholic Church, saying to me, as the Son of God said to the paralytic, “My child, be of good cheer; thy sins are forgiven thee.”

5. Solomon says, “One may be rich, though he hath nothing.” This is true of thee, land of Erin. Outwardly thou art in rags, poverty-stricken, famine-stricken; but within a bright and glorious, true as the needle to the pole, faithful even unto death, awaiting the crown of life. Truly thou art a land of saints; for I do believe that no nation on earth hath sent, and doth yearly send, so many saints to heaven.

6. Thou art a vast seminary for the education of bishop priests, and apostolic men, who go forth into all the world and proclaim the gospel to every creature. Thou art a golden immortal flower, blooming amid thorns, and sending forth thy winged seeds, on every breeze, to gladden other nations, and to plant the faith in other lands.

152. GOVERNMENT OF CANADA.

MORRIS.

1. IN A. D. 1840, the Upper and Lower Provinces were reunited, and constituted into the Province of Canada, with the Legislature, composed, as before, of a Legislative Council nominated by the Crown, and an Assembly of eighty-four members elected by the people, forty-two from each Province. Under this Act the government of the country has been conducted; but the House of Assembly has been latterly increased to one hundred and thirty members, sixty-five from each Province, returned by counties, cities, and towns. The Legislative Council, after the death of those members who were nominated by the Crown, will be elective. Before a statute becomes law, the assent of the two legislative bodies and of the Crown is necessary. Money bills originate in the People's House. The power of the Legislature is almost unchecked, regulating taxes, customs, private rights, and the general government of the Province by its Acts, the Queen merely withholding, as she has the power to do, her assent from a measure. Sessions are required to be held annually, and the duration of the Parliament is four years, though it may be previously dissolved by the Governor-General.

2. The government of the Province is conducted by a Governor-General appointed by the Crown, who presides at the deliberations of an Executive Council nominated by the Crown, but who must, according to the theory of responsible government in practical force in Canada, possess the confidence of the people, as evinced by a majority of the House of Assembly; and who, consequently, may lose their places on a vote of want of confidence. The Executive Council is composed of the following officials, viz.: a President of the Committees of the Council (who is also Chairman of the Bureau of Agriculture, and of the Board of Registration and Statistics); a Provincial Secretary, a Minister of Finance, a Commissioner of Crown Lands, a Receiver-General, one Attorney-General for each section of the Province, the Speaker of the Legislative Council, a Commissioner of the Board of Public Works, and a Postmaster-General. These incumbents preside over the public departments indicated by their titles, in addition to exercising the functions of Executive Councilors. On the acceptance of office, the incumbent elect, already a member of the government, must present himself to the people for re-election.

3. Such is the system of governing by legislative majorities and responsibility to the electors, which is in force in Canada. Practically the government of the Province is self-government, the British Government rarely interposing the weight of its authority, but, on the contrary, distinctly enunciating its desire to allow the Province the widest latitude in self-government, compatible with the colonial relation. In fact, the Canadas enjoy the largest measure of political liberty possessed by any country or people. The public offices, and the seats in the Legislature, are practically open to all. The people, by their representatives in Parliament, regulate all matters of provincial interest, and by their municipal system they regulate their municipal matters, while they possess and exercise the power of rejecting at the polls those who have forfeited their confidence. The inhabitants of Canada are bound to Britain by the ties of common interest, common origin, and filial attachment. Owning a grateful allegiance to their sovereign, they are proud to share the heritage of Britain's ancestral glories, while they are not slow in evincing their sympathy with her struggles, as the munificent grant of £20,000 sterling, gracefully appropriated by the Legislature to the patriotic fund, and to the widows and orphans of the soldiers of her ally, France, proudly shows. The policy of Britain is a wise one. She is building up on the broad foundations of sound political liberty, freedom of thought and conscience, a colony which will one day (though the connection will never be rudely severed), attain the position of a nation, and, peopled by inhabitants knit to Britain by the strongest ties of blood, and identity of feeling, will strengthen her hands and support her position by the reflex influence of sound, national, and constitutional sentiment.

153. ABRAHAM AND THE FIRE-WORSHIPPER.

HOUSEHOLD WORDS.

SCENE—The inside of a Tent, in which the Patriarch ABRAHAM and a PERSIAN TRAVELLER, a Fire-Worshipper, are sitting awhile after supper.

Fire-Worshipper [aside]. What have I said, or done, that by degrees

mine host hath changed his gracious countenance,
Until he stareth on me, as in wrath !

Have I, 'twixt wake and sleep, lost his wise lore ?
Or sit I thus too long, and he himself

Would fain be sleeping ? I will speak to that.

[Aloud.] Impute it, O my great and gracious lord !

unto my feeble flesh, and not my folly, mine old eyelids droop against their will,

and I become as one that hath no sense

even to the milk and honey of thy words.—

With my lord's leave, and his good servant's help, my limbs would creep to bed.

Abraham [angrily quitting his seat]. In this tent, never.

thou art a thankless and an impious man.

Fire-W. [rising in astonishment]. A thankless and an impious man ! Oh, sir,

my thanks have all but worshipp'd thee.

Abraham. And whom forgotten ? like the fawning dog I feed.

From the foot-washing to the meal, and now

this thy cramm'd and dog-like wish for bed,

hast thou noted thee ; and never hast thou breathed

the syllable of prayer, or praise, or thanks, to the great God who made and feedeth all.

Fire-W. Oh, sir, the god I worship is the Fire, the god of gods ; and seeing him not here,

any symbol, or on any shrine,

I waited till he bless'd mine eyes at morn,
Sitting in heaven.

Abraham. O foul idolater !

And dar'est thou still to breathe in Abraham's tent ?
Forth with thee, wretch ; for he that made thy god,
And all thy tribe, and all the host of heaven,
The invisible and only dreadful God,
Will speak to thee this night, out in the storm,
And try thee in thy foolish god, the Fire,
Which with his fingers he makes lightnings of.
Hark to the rising of his robes, the winds,
And get thee forth, and wait him.

[A violent storm is heard rising]

Fire-W. What ! unhoused ;

And on a night like this ! me, poor old man,
A hundred years of age !

Abraham [urging him away]. Not reverencing
The God of ages, thou revolt'st reverence.

Fire-W. Thou hadst a father ;—think of his gray hairs, Houseless, and cuff'd by such a storm as this.

Abraham. God is thy father, and thou own'st not him.

Fire-W. I have a wife, as agèd as myself,
And if she learn my death, she'll not survive it,
No, not a day ; she is so used to me ;
So propp'd up by her other feeble self.
I pray thee, strike us not both down.

Abraham [still urging him]. God made
Husband and wife, and must be own'd of them,
Else he must needs disown them.

Fire-W. We have children,--
One of them, sir, a daughter, who, next week,
Will all day long be going in and out,
Upon the watch for me ; she, too, a wife,
And will be soon a mother. Spare, oh, spare her !
She's a good creature, and not strong.

Abraham. Mine ears
Are deaf to all things but thy blasphemy,
And to the coming of the Lord and God,

Who will this night condemn thee.

[ABRAHAM pushes him out; and remains alone, speaking.

For if ever

God came at night-time forth upon the world,
'Tis now this instant. Hark to the huge winds,
The cataracts of hail, and rocky thunder,
Splitting like quarries of the stony clouds,
Beneath the touching of the foot of God!
That was God's speaking in the heavens,—that last
And inward utterance coming by itself.
What is it shaketh thus thy servant, Lord,
Making him fear, that in some loud rebuke
To this idolater, whom thou abhorrest,
Terror will slay himself? Lo, the earth quakes
Beneath my feet, and God is surely here.

[A dead silence; and then a still small voice.

The Voice. Abraham!

Abraham. Where art thou, Lord? and who is it that speaks

So sweetly in mine ear, to bid me turn
And dare to face thy presence?

The Voice.

Who but He

Whose mightiest utterance thou hast yet to learn?

I was not in the whirlwind, Abraham;

I was not in the thunder, or the earthquake;

But I am in the still small voice.

Where is the stranger whom thou tookest in?

Abraham. Lord, he denied thee, and I drove him forth.

The Voice. Then didst thou do what God himself forbore.

Have I, although he did deny me, borne

With his injuriousness these hundred years,

And couldst thou not endure him one sole night,

And such a night as this?

Abraham.

Lord! I have sinn'd,

And will go forth, and if he be not dead,

Will call him back, and tell him of thy mercies

Both to himself and me.

The Voice.

Behold, and learn!

[The Voice retires while it is speaking ; and a fold of the tent is turned back, disclosing the FIRE-WORSHIPPER, who is calmly sleeping, with his head on the back of a house-lamb.

Abraham. O loving God! the lamb itself's his pillow,
And on his forehead is a balmy dew,
And in his sleep he smileth. I meantime,
Poor and proud fool, with my presumptuous hands,
Not God's, was dealing judgments on his head,
Which God himself had cradled!—Oh, methinks
There's more in this than prophet yet hath known,
And Faith, some day, will all in Love be shown.

154. PATRIOTISM AND CHRISTIANITY.

CHATEAUBRIAND.

1. BUT it is the Christian religion that has invested patriotism with its true character. This sentiment led to the commission of crime among the ancients, because it was carried to excess ; Christianity has made it one of the principal affections in man, but not an exclusive one. It commands us above all things to be just ; it requires us to cherish the whole family of Adam, since we ourselves belong to it, though our countrymen have the first claim to our attachment.

2. This morality was unknown before the coming of the Christian lawgiver, who had been unjustly accused of attempting to extirpate the passions : God destroys not his own work. The gospel is not the destroyer of the heart, but its regulator. It is to our feelings what taste is to the fine arts ; it retrenches all that is exaggerated, false, common, and trivial ; it leaves all that is fair, and good, and true. The Christian religion, rightly understood, is only primitive nature washed from original pollution.

3. It is when at a distance from our country that we feel the full force of the instinct by which we are attached to it. For want of the reality, we try to feed upon dreams ; for the heart is expert in deception, and there is no one who has been suckled at the breast of woman but has drunk of the cup of illusion. Sometimes it is a cottage which is situated like the paternal habitation; sometimes it is a wood, a valley, a hill, on which we bestow some of the sweet appellations of our native land. Andromache gives the name of Simois to a brook. And what an affecting object is this little rill, which recalls the idea of a mighty river in her native country! Remote from the soil which gave us birth, nature appears to us diminished, and but the shadow of that which we have lost.

4. Another artifice of the love of country is to attach a great value to an object of little intrinsic worth, but which comes from our native land, and which we have brought with us into exile. The soul seems to dwell even upon the inanimate things which have shared our destiny: we remain attached to the down on which our prosperity has slumbered, and still more to the straw on which we counted the days of our adversity. The vulgar have an energetic expression, to describe that languor which oppresses the soul when away from our country. "That man," they say, "is home-sick."

5. A sickness it really is, and the only cure for it is to return. If, however, we have been absent a few years, what do we find in the place of our nativity? How few of those whom we left behind in the vigor of health are still alive! Here are tombs where once stood palaces; there rise palaces where we left tombs. The paternal field is overgrown with briers, or cultivated by the plough of a stranger; and the tree beneath which we frolicked in our boyish days has disappeared.

6. Were we asked, what are those powerful ties which bind us to the place of our nativity, we would find some difficulty in answering the question. It is, perhaps, the smile of a mother, of a father, of a sister; it is, perhaps, the recollection of the old preceptor who instructed us, and of the young companions of our childhood; it is, perhaps, the care bestowed upon us by a tender nurse, by some aged domestic, so essential a part of the household; finally, it is something most simple, and, if you please, trivial,—a dog that barked at night in the fields, a nightingale that returned every year to the orchard, the nest of the swallow over the window, the village clock that appeared above the trees, the churchyard yew, or the Gothic tomb. Yet these simple things demonstrate the more clearly the reality of a Providence, as they could not possibly be the source of patriotism, or of the great virtues which it begets, unless by the appointment of the Almighty himself.

155. PETER THE HERMIT.

MICHAUD.

JOSEPH FRANCOIS MICHAUD—born at Albens, in Savoy, in 1767; died, 1839. His greatest claim to the attention of posterity is his "History of the Crusades." It is, indeed, the best work yet written on that period, and is justly considered one of the greatest historical works of modern times. Robson, the English translator, has disfigured the work by notes of a partisan and illiberal character, differing entirely from the spirit of the work.

1. PETER the Hermit traversed Italy, crossed the Alps, visited all parts of France, and the greatest portion of Europe, inflaming all hearts with the same zeal that consumed his own. He travelled mounted on a mule, with a crucifix in his hand, his feet bare, his head uncovered, his body girded with a thick cord, covered with a long frock, and a hermit's hood of the coarsest stuff. The singularity of his appearance was a spectacle for the people, while the austerity of his manners, his charity, and the moral doctrines that he preached, caused him to be revered as a saint wherever he came.

2. He went from city to city, from province to province, working upon the courage of some, and upon the piety of others; sometimes haranguing from the pulpits of the churches, sometimes preaching in the high-roads or public places. His eloquence was animated and impressive, and filled with those vehement apostrophes which produce such effects upon an uncultivated multitude. He described the profanation of the holy places, and the blood of the Christians shed in torrents in the streets of Jerusalem.

3. He invoked, by turns, Heaven, the saints, the angels, whom he called upon to bear witness to the truth of what he told them. He apostrophized Mount Sion, the rock of Calvary, and the Mount of Olives, which he made to resound with sobs and groans. When he had exhausted speech in painting the miseries of the faithful, he showed the spectators the crucifix which he carried with him ; sometimes striking his breast and wounding his flesh, sometimes shedding torrents of tears.

4. The people followed the steps of Peter in crowds. The preacher of the holy war was received everywhere as a messenger from God. They who could touch his vestments esteemed themselves happy, and a portion of hair pulled from the mule he rode was preserved as a holy relic. At the sound of his voice, differences in families were reconciled, the poor were comforted, the debauched blushed at their errors ; nothing was talked of but the virtues of the eloquent cenobite ; his austerities and his miracles were described, and his discourses were repeated to those who had not heard him, and been edified by his presence.

5. He often met, in his journeys, with Christians from the East, who had been banished from their country, and wandered over Europe, subsisting on charity. Peter the Hermit presented them to the people, as living evidences of the barbarity of the infidels ; and pointing to the rags with which they were clothed, he burst into torrents of invectives against their oppressors and persecutors.

6. At the sight of these miserable wretches, the faithful felt, by turns, the most lively emotions of pity, and the fury of vengeance ; all deploring in their hearts the miseries and the disgrace of Jerusalem. The people raised their voices towards heaven, to entreat God to deign to cast a look of pity upon his beloved city ; some offering their riches, others their prayers, but all promising to lay down their lives for the deliverance of the holy places.

156. THE CELTIC CROSS.

T. D. MCGEE.

1. THROUGH storm, and fire, and gloom, I see it stand,
Firm, broad, and tall—
The Celtic Cross that marks our Fatherland,
Amid them all !
Druids, and Danes, and Saxons, vainly rage
Around its base ;
It standeth shock on shock, and age on age,
Star of a scatter'd race.
2. O Holy Cross ! dear symbol of the dread
Death of our Lord,
Around thee long have slept our Martyr-dead,
Sword over sword !
A hundred Bishops I myself can count
Among the slain ;
Chiefs, Captains, rank and file, a shining mount
Of God's ripe grain.
3. The Monarch's mace, the Puritan's claymore,
Smote thee not down ;
On headland steep, on mountain summit hoar,
In mart and town ;
In Glendalough, in Ara, in Tyrone,
We find thee still,
Thy open arms still stretching to thine own,
O'er town, and lough, and hill.
4. And they would tear thee out of Irish soil,
The guilty fools !
How Time must mock their antiquated toil
And broken tools !
Cranmer and Cromwell from thy grasp retired,
Baffled and thrown :
William and Anne to sap thy site conspired—
The rest is known !

5. Holy Saint Patrick, Father of our Faith,
 Beloved of God !
 Shield thy dear Church from the impending scathe ;
 Or, if the rod
 Must scourge it yet again, inspire and raise
 To emprise high,
 Men like the heroic race of other days,
 Who joy'd to die !

6. Fear ! Wherefore should the Celtic people fear
 Their Church's fate ?
 The day is not—the day was never near—
 Could desolate
 The Destined Island, all whose seedy clay
 Is holy ground—
 Its cross shall stand till that predestined day,
 When Erin's self is drown'd !

157. CAN THE SOLDIER BE AN ATHEIST ?

CHATEAUBRIAND.

1. WILL the soldier who marches forth to battle—that child of glory—be an atheist ? Will he who seeks an endless life consent to perish forever ? Appear upon your thundering clouds, ye countless Christian warriors, now hosts of heaven ! appear ! From your exalted abode, from the holy city, proclaim to the heroes of our day that the brave man is not wholly consigned to the tomb, and that something more of him survives than an empty name.

2. All the great generals of antiquity were remarkable for their piety. Epaminondas, the deliverer of his country, had the character of the most religious of men ; Xenophon, that philosophic warrior, was a pattern of piety ; Alexander, the everlasting model of conquerors, gave himself out to be the son of Jupiter. Among the Romans, the ancient consuls of the republic, a Cincinnatus, a Fabius, a Papirius Cursor, a Paulus

Æmilius, a Scipio, placed all their reliance on the deity of the Capitol; Pompey marched to battle imploring the divine assistance; Cæsar pretended to be of celestial descent; Cato, his rival, was convinced of the immortality of the soul; Brutus, his assassin, believed in the existence of supernatural powers; and Augustus, his successor, reigned only in the name of the gods.

3. In modern times was that valiant Sicambrian, the conqueror of Rome and of the Gauls, an unbeliever, who, falling at the feet of a priest, laid the foundation of the empire of France? Was St. Louis, the arbiter of kings,—revered by infidels themselves,—an unbeliever? Was the valorous Du Guesclin, whose coffin was sufficient for the capture of cities,—the Chevalier Bayard, without fear and without reproach,—the old Constable de Montmorenci, who recited his beads in the camp,—were these men without religion? But, more wonderful still, was the great Turenne, whom Bossuet brought back to the bosom of the Church, an unbeliever?

4. No character is more admirable than that of the Christian hero. The people whom he defends look up to him as a father; he protects the husbandman and the produce of his fields; he is an angel of war sent by God to mitigate the horrors of that scourge. Cities open their gates at the mere report of his justice; ramparts fall before his virtue; he is beloved by the soldier, he is idolized by nations; with the courage of the warrior he combines the charity of the gospel; his conversation is impressive and instructing; his words are full of simplicity; you are astonished to find such gentleness in a man accustomed to live in the midst of dangers. Thus the honey is hidden under the rugged bark of an oak which has braved the tempests of ages. We may safely conclude that in no respect whatever is atheism profitable for the soldier.

158. JAPANESE MARTYRS.

CADDELL.

CECILIA MARY CADDELL—an English authoress, who has made many graceful and interesting contributions to the Catholic literature of our day. Among others, "Tales of the Festivals," "Miner's Daughter," "Blanche Leslie," and "Missions in Japan and Paraguay."

1. SCARCELY had the exiles reached this hospitable asylum ere another edict was published in Figo, commanding all the remaining Christians to repair to the house of a bonze appointed for the purpose, and in his presence to perform a certain ceremony, which was to be considered as a declaration of their belief in his teaching. Death was to be the penalty of a refusal; and two noblemen, named John and Simon, were chosen as examples of severity to the rest. Both were friends of the governor, to whom the order had been intrusted, and he did what he could to save them.

2. "If they would but feign compliance with the king's decree," or "have the ceremony privately performed at their own houses," or "bribe the bonze to allow it to be supposed he had received their recantation,"—each of these alternatives was as eagerly urged as it was indignantly rejected; and when a band of ruffians dragged John to the bonze's house, and set the superstitious book which was to be the token of his apostasy by main force upon his head, he protested so loudly and vehemently against the violence done to his will, that nothing remained but to sentence him to death. The execution took place in the presence of the governor; and from the chamber, still reeking with the blood of one friend, he went to the house of the other on a similar mission, and with equal reluctance.

3. Simon was quietly conversing with his mother when the governor entered; and the latter could not refrain from weeping as he besought that lady to have pity upon them both, and, by advising compliance with the king's commands, to spare herself the anguish of losing a son, and himself that of imbruing his hands in the blood of a friend. Touching as was the appeal, it was made in vain; for in her answer the Christian mother proved true to her faith; so that the governor left the house, indignantly declaring that by her obstinacy she was guilty of the death of her son.

4. Another nobleman entered soon afterwards, charged with the personal execution of the sentence. This was no unusual method of proceeding, since every Japanese nobleman, strange to say, may at any moment be called upon to officiate in such cases, it being a favor often granted to persons of rank to die by the hand of a friend or a servant, rather than by that of the ordinary headsman. Jotivava was a friend of Simon's, and he proceeded with what heart he might to his sad and revolting duty.

5. Knowing his errand well, Simon received him with an affectionate smile, and then prostrated himself in prayer before an image of our Saviour crowned with thorns, while his wife and mother called for warm water that he might wash,—a ceremony the Japanese always observe upon joyful occasions. Tears of natural regret would flow, indeed, even in the midst of this generous exultation; and Agnes, falling upon her knees, besought her husband to cut off her hair, as a sign that she never would marry again.

6. After a little hesitation, he complied with this request; prophesying, however, that she and his mother would soon follow him to heaven; and then, accompanied by the three Giffiaques, or officers of the Confraternity of Mercy, whom he had summoned to be present at the execution, they all entered the hall where it was intended to take place. Michael, one of the Giffiaques, carried a crucifix; the other two bore lighted torches; and Simon walked between his wife and mother, while his disconsolate servants brought up the rear.

7. An unhappy renegade met them at the entrance, to take leave of Simon; but struck by the contrast between his own conduct and that of the martyr, he burst into tears, and was unable to speak. Most eloquently did Simon urge him to repentance, unconsciously using almost the very words of his Divine Master, as he bade him weep, "not for his own approaching fate, but for the fell apostasy by which he, a renegade, had rendered himself guilty of hell-fire;" then, distributing his rosaries and other objects of devotion as memorials among his friends, he refused to give to the apostate a single bead, urgently as he besought it of him, unless he would make a solemn promise of repentance and amendment.

8. The condition was at length accepted, and Simon joyfully returned to his prayers. He and his friends recited the litany; and then, bowing before a picture of our Saviour till his forehead touched the ground, the nobleman who acted as executioner took off his head at a single blow. It fell at the feet of one of the Giffiaques; but his mother, with the courage of a Machabee, took it in her hands, exclaiming, "Oh, dear head, resplendent now with celestial glory! Oh, happy Simon, who hast had the honor of dying for Him who died for thee! My God! Thou didst give me Thy Son; take now this son of mine, sacrificed for the love of Thee!"

9. After the mother came poor Agnes, weeping some softer tears over the relics of her husband; and then, foreseeing that her own death would speedily follow upon his, she and her mother betook themselves to prayer, the three Giffiaques remaining in attendance, in order to be able to assist at their execution; and, in fact, twenty-four hours had not elapsed before it was told them they were to die; the officer who came to acquaint them with their sentence bringing with him Magdalen, the wife of John, and Lewis, a little child whom the latter had adopted as his own, both of whom were condemned to a similar fate.

159. JAPANESE MARTYRS—continued.

1. WITH eager joy the prisoners embraced each other, praising, blessing, and thanking God, not only that they were to suffer for Jesus, but also that they were to suffer on a cross like Jesus; and then, robed in their best attire, they set off for the place of execution in palanquins which the guards had provided for the purpose. The Giffiaques walked at their side; but small need had they to offer motives for constancy to these heroic souls, burning with the desire of martyrdom, and eager to enter the path by which their nearest and dearest had already ascended to heaven.

2. Jane, the mother of Simon, besought the executioner to bind her limbs as tightly as possible, that she might thus share the anguish which the nails inflicted upon those of Jesus ; and she preached from her cross with so much force and eloquence, that the presiding officer, fearing the effects of her words upon the people, had her stabbed without waiting for the rest of the victims. Lewis and Magdalen were tied up next. They bound the child so violently that he could not refrain from shrieking ; but when they asked him if he was afraid to die, he said he was not ; and so they took and set him up directly opposite his mother.

3. For a brief interval, the martyr and her adopted child gazed silently on each other ; then, summoning all her strength, she said, "Son, we are going to heaven : take courage, and cry, 'Jesus, Mary !' with your latest breath." And again the child replied, as he had done before when, on leaving their own home, she had made him a similar exhortation, "Mother, you shall be obeyed !" The executioner struck at him first, but missed his aim ; and more than ever fearing for his constancy, Magdalen exhorted him from her cross, while Michael, standing at its foot spoke words of comfort to him.

4. But the child needed not their urging ; he did not shriek again, nor did he shrink, but waited patiently until a second blow had pierced him through and through ; and the lance, yet reeking with his blood, was directly afterwards plunged into the heart of his mother, whose sharpest pang had probably already passed on the instant when the son of her love expired before her. And now the fair and youthful Agnes alone remained, kneeling, as when she first had reached the place of execution ; for no one had yet had the courage to approach her.

5. Like the headsman of her namesake, the loveliest child of Christian story, her very executioners could only weep that they were bid to mar the beauty of any thing so fair ; their hands were powerless to do their office ; and finding at last that no one sought to bind her, she went herself and laid her gently and modestly down upon her cross. There she lay, waiting for her hour, calm and serene as if pillowed on an angel's bosom, until at length some of the spectators, induced partly by a bribe offered by the executioner, but chiefly by a bigoted hatred of her religion, bound her, and lifted up her cross, and then struck her blow after blow, until beneath their rude and unaccustomed hands she painfully expired.

6. For a year and a day the bodies were left to hang upon their crosses, as a terror to all others of the same religion; but Christians were not wanting to watch the blackening corpses, and, with a love like that of Respha, the mother of the sons of Saul, to drive from thence the fowls of the air by day, and the beasts of the field by night; and finally, when the period of prohibition was expired, reverently to gather the hallowed bones to their last resting-place in the church of Nangasaki.

160. BOYHOOD'S YEARS.

MEEHAN.

REV. CHARLES MEEHAN, a gifted Irish priest, who has contributed some valuable works to the literature of his country. His "Confederation of Kilkenny," and "History of the Geraldines," are the best known. He has also written some very good poetry scattered here and there through the Irish periodicals.

1. AH! why should I recall them—the gay, the joyous years,
Ere hope was cross'd or pleasure dimm'd by sorrow and by tears?
Or why should memory love to trace youth's glad and sunlit way,
When those who made its charms so sweet are gather'd to decay?
The summer's sun shall come again to brighten hill and bower—
The teeming earth its fragrance bring beneath the balmy shower—

But all in vain will memory strive, in vain we shed our tears—

They're gone away and can't return—the friends of boy-hood's years !

2. Ah! why then wake my sorrow, and bid me now count o'er

The vanish'd friends so dearly prized—the days to come no more—

The happy days of infancy, when no guile our bosoms knew,

Nor reck'd we of the pleasures that with each moment flew ?

'Tis all in vain to weep for them—the past a dream appears :

And where are they—the loved, the young, the friends of
boyhood's years ?

3. Go seek them in the cold churchyard—they long have stol'n to rest ;

But do not weep, for their young cheeks by woe were ne'er oppress'd ;

Life's sun for them in splendor set—no cloud came o'er the ray

That lit them from this gloomy world upon their joyous way.

No tears about their graves be shed—but sweetest flowers be flung,

The fittest offering thou canst make to hearts that perish young—

To hearts this world has never torn with racking hopes and fears ;

For bless'd are they who pass away in boyhood's happy
years !

161. ON THE LOOK OF A GENTLEMAN.

HAZLITT.

WILLIAM HAZLITT, born in Maidstone, Kent, England, in 1778; died in 1830. As an essayist and a critic, Hazlitt holds a high place among English authors. He is especially esteemed for the philosophical spirit of his criticisms. His largest work is the "Life of Napoleon;" but his fame chiefly rests on his essays and reviews. He was also distinguished as a journalist.

1. WHAT it is that constitutes the look of a gentleman is more easily felt than described. We all know it when we see it; but we do not know how to account for it, or to explain in what it consists. Ease, grace, dignity, have been given as the exponents and expressive symbols of this look; but I would rather say, that an habitual self-possession determines the appearance of a gentleman. He should have the complete command not only over his countenance, but over his limbs and motions. In other words, he should discover in his air and manner a voluntary power over his whole body, which, with every inflexion of it, should be under the control of his will.

2. It must be evident that he looks and does as he likes, without any restraint, confusion, or awkwardness. He is, in fact, master of his person, as the professor of an art or science is of a particular instrument; he directs it to what use he pleases and intends. Wherever this power and facility appear, we recognize the look and deportment of the gentleman, that is, of a person who by his habits and situation in life, and in his ordinary intercourse with society, has had little else to do than to study those movements, and that carriage of the body, which were accompanied with most satisfaction to himself, and were calculated to excite the approbation of the beholder.

3. Ease, it might be observed, is not enough; dignity is too much. There must be a certain retenu, a conscious decorum added to the first,—and a certain "familiarity of regard, quenching the austere countenance of control," in the second, to answer to our conception of this character. Perhaps, propriety is as near a word as any to denote the manners of the gentleman ; elegance is necessary to the fine gentleman ; dignity is proper to noblemen ; and majesty to kings !

4. Wherever this constant and decent subjection of the body to the mind is visible in the customary actions of walking, sitting, riding, standing, speaking, &c., we draw the same conclusion as to the individual—whatever may be the impediments or unavoidable defects in the machine, of which he has the management. A man may have a mean or disagreeable exterior, may halt in his gait, or have lost the use of half his limbs ; and yet he may show this habitual attention to what is graceful and becoming in the use he makes of all the power he has left—in the “nice conduct” of the most unpromising and impracticable figure.

5. A humpbacked or deformed man does not necessarily look like a clown or a mechanic ; on the contrary, from his care in the adjustment of his appearance, and his desire to remedy his defects, he for the most part acquires something of the look of a gentleman. The common nickname of My Lord, applied to such persons, has allusion to this—to their circumspect deportment, and tacit resistance to vulgar prejudice. Lord Ogleby, in the “Clandestine Marriage,” is as crazy a piece of elegance and refinement, even after he is “wound up for the day,” as can well be imagined ; yet in the hands of a genuine actor, his tottering step, his twitches of the gout, his unsuccessful attempts at youth and gayety, take nothing from the nobleman.

6. He has the ideal model in his mind, resents his deviations from it with proper horror, recovers himself from any ungraceful action as soon as possible : does all he can with his limited means, and fails in his just pretensions not from inadvertence, but necessity. Sir Joseph Banks, who was almost bent double, retained to the last the look of a privy-counsellor. There was all the firmness and dignity that could be given by the sense of his own importance to so distorted and disabled a trunk.

7. Sir Charles Bunbury, as he saunters down St. James’s street, with a large slouched hat, a lack-lustre eye and aquiline nose, an old shabby drab-colored coat, buttoned across his breast without a cape—with old top-boots, and his hands in his waistcoat or breeches' pockets, as if he were strolling along his own garden-walks, or over the turf at Newmarket, after having made his bets secure—presents nothing very dazzling, or graceful, or dignified to the imagination ; though you can tell infallibly at the first glance, or even a bowshot off, that he is a gentleman of the first water.

8. What is the clue to this mystery ? It is evident that his person costs him no more trouble than an old glove. His limbs are, from long practice, left to take care of themselves ; they move of their own accord ; he does not strut or stand on tip-toe to show

——“how tall

His person is above them all :”— but he seems to find his own level, and wherever he is, to slide into his place naturally ; he is equally at home among lords or gamblers ; nothing can discompose his fixed serenity of look and purpose ; there is no mark of superciliousness about him, nor does it appear as if any thing could meet his eye to startle or throw him off his guard ; he neither avoids nor courts notice ; but the archaism of his dress may be understood to denote a lingering partiality for the costume of the last age, and something like a prescriptive contempt for the finery of this.

162. SOCIAL CHARACTERS.

CHATEAUBRIAND.

1. THOSE characters which we have denominated social, are reduced by the poet to two—the priest and the soldier. Had we not set apart the fourth division of our work for the history of the clergy and the benefits which they confer, it would be an easy task to show here how far superior, in point of variety and grandeur, is the character of the Christian priest to that of the priest of polytheism.

2. What exquisite pictures might be drawn, from the pastor of the rustic hamlet to the pontiff whose brows are encircled with the papal tiara ; from the parish priest of the city to the anchoret of the rock ; from the Carthusian and the inmate of La Trappe to the learned Benedictine ; from the missionary, and the multitude of religious devoted to the alleviation of all the ills that afflict humanity, to the inspired prophet of ancient Sion !

3. The order of virgins is not less varied or numerous, nor less varied in its pursuits. Those daughters of charity who consecrate their youth and their charms to the service of the afflicted,—those inhabitants of the cloister who, under the protection of the altar, educate the future wives of men, while they congratulate themselves on their own union with a heavenly spouse,—this whole innocent family is in admirable correspondence with the nine sisters of fable. Antiquity presented nothing more to the poet than a high-priest, a sorcerer, a vestal, a sibyl. These characters, moreover, were but accidentally introduced ; whereas the Christian priest is calculated to act one of the most important parts in the epic.

4. M. de la Harpe has shown in his Melanie what effects may be produced with the character of a village curate when delineated by an able hand. Shakspeare, Richardson, Goldsmith, have brought the priest upon the stage with more or less felicity. As to external pomp, what religion was ever accompanied with ceremonies so magnificent as ours ? Corpus Christi day, Christmas, Holy-week, Easter, All-souls, the funeral ceremony, the Mass, and a thousand other rites, furnish an inexhaustible subject for splendid or pathetic descriptions.

5. The modern muse that complains of Christianity cannot certainly be acquainted with its riches. Tasso has described a procession in the Jerusalem, and it is one of the finest passages in his poem. In short, the ancient sacrifice itself is not banished from the Christian subject ; for nothing is more easy than, by means of an episode, a comparison, or a retrospective view, to introduce a sacrifice of the ancient covenant.

163. THE INDIAN BOAT.

MOORE.

1. 'Twas midnight dark,
The seaman's bark
Swift o'er the waters bore him,
When, through the night,
He spied a light
Shoot o'er the wave before him.
"A sail ! a sail !" he cries ;
"She comes from the Indian shore,
And to-night shall be our prize,
With her freight of golden ore ;
Sail on ! sail on !"
When morning shone,
He saw the gold still clearer ;
But, though so fast
The waves he pass'd,
That boat seem'd never the nearer.

2. Bright daylight came,
And still the same
Rich bark before him floated ;
While on the prize
His wistful eyes
Like any young lover's doated :
"More sail ! more sail !" he cries,
While the waves o'ertop the mast :
And while his bounding galley flies,
Like an arrow before the blast.
Thus on, and on,
Till day was gone,
And the moon through heaven did hie her,
He swept the main,
But all in vain,
That boat seem'd never the nigher.

3. And many a day
 To night gave way,
 And many a morn succeeded :
 While still his flight,
 Through day and night,
 That restless mariner speeded.
 Who knows—who knows, what seas
 He is now careering o'er ?
 Behind, the eternal breeze,
 And that mocking bark, before !
 For, oh, till sky
 And earth shall die,
 And their death leave none to rue it,
 That boat must flee
 O'er the boundless sea,
 And that ship in vain pursue it.

164. DEATH OF CHARLES II. OF ENGLAND.

ROBERTSON.

1. ON Monday, the 2d of February, 1685, the king, after a feverish and restless night, rose at an early hour. Though the remedies administered to him were attended with partial success, it soon became evident that the hour of his dissolution was rapidly approaching.

2. His brother, the Duke of York, whose persecution he had sometimes weakly consented to, was in his last illness destined to be his ministering angel of consolation. James knelt down by the pillow of the sick monarch, and asked if he might send for a Catholic priest. "For God's sake do," was the king's reply; but he immediately added, "Will it not expose you to danger?"

3. James replied, "that he cared not for the danger," and sending out a trusty messenger, shortly afterwards introduced to his majesty the Rev. Mr. Huddleston, with these words—

"Sir, this worthy man comes to save your soul." The priest threw himself on his knees, and offered to the dying monarch the aid of his ministry.

4. To his inquiries Charles replied, "that it was his desire to die in the communion of the Roman Catholic Church ; that he heartily repented of all his sins, and in particular of having deferred his reconciliation to that hour ; that he hoped for salvation from the merits of Christ his Saviour ; that he pardoned all his enemies, asked pardon of all whom he had offended, and was in peace with all men ; and that he purposed, if God should spare him, to prove the sincerity of his repentance by a thorough amendment of life."

5. The Rev. Mr. Huddleston, having heard his confession, administered to him the holy viaticum, anointed him, and retired. About two o'clock in the night, looking on the duke, who was kneeling at his bedside and kissing his hand, the monarch called him "the best of friends and brothers, desired him to forgive the harsh treatment which he had sometimes received, and prayed that God might grant him a long and prosperous reign"—words the truest which Charles had ever spoken, uttered on the threshold of that eternity, where all dissimulation is vain.

6. At noon on the following day, the 6th of February, 1685, the monarch calmly expired.

For this singular grace of a death-bed repentance, after a life so scandalous, I have often thought that Charles was indebted to the prayers of a holy priest whom, under peculiar circumstances, he had during his exile met with in Germany. The anecdote, with your permission, I will now state.

7. A few years before the restoration, Charles was on a visit to the ecclesiastical elector of Mayence. In the course of conversation the elector said to the prince, "There is in my arch-diocese a saintly priest, called Holzhauser, possessing the gifts of prophecy and miracle, and who, many years ago, and long before the event, foretold the tragic end of your royal father, and is deeply interested in English affairs : would you like to see him?" "By all means," replied Charles.

8. The priest was accordingly sent for, and though the night was stormy, he traversed in a boat, at the risk of his life, the Rhine from Bingen to Mayence. Having been introduced to the English prince, the latter questioned him much as to the prophecy relative to his father's death. All that passed in this secret interview, which was prolonged far into the night, is not known.

9. But Holzhauser declared, that on taking leave of the prince he invited him over to England, in case he should ever be restored to the throne of his ancestors. In reply, the holy man observed, he had long burned with the desire to preach the faith in England, and that if his duty to his congregation allowed him, he would accept the invitation. Charles shook hands with him in bidding him farewell, and he in turn strongly commended to the future king the protection of his English and Irish Catholic subjects.

165. RELIGION AN ESSENTIAL ELEMENT IN EDUCATION.

STAFF.

VERY REV. J. A. STAFF, a German priest, and Professor of Moral Theology. From his admirable work on "The Spirit and Scope of Education," we extract the following:

1. To educate is not merely to awaken by some means or other the dormant faculties of the soul, and to give them any training which may happen to strike the educator's fancy. To educate a child, is to rescue the rising man from the perdition entailed upon him by Adam's fall, and to render him capable of attaining his true end in this world and in the next. As a citizen of this world, he has to fit himself for the sphere of action in which Providence intends him to move; and as a candidate for the kingdom of heaven, with his hopes in eternity, he has to produce fruits which will last forever.

2. To imagine that it is impossible to bring up a child at once for earth and for heaven, is to betray very little knowledge of things. God himself has placed us on earth as in a preparatory school and a place of probation, and it is His will, that while we are here we should all, in our respective callings, contribute our best exertions towards the welfare of the whole. For this purpose He has bestowed certain talents upon us, of the employment of which He will one day demand a strict account. Matt. xxv. 15. If we wish, then, to attain to our true and last end, which reaches from time into eternity, we must to the best of our power finish here on earth the task allotted to us. "What things a man shall sow, those also shall he reap." Gal. vi. 8.

3. The branch of education which has earth in view is most intimately connected with the other, which aims at heaven. The union between them is indissoluble. What is here advanced, would only then involve contradiction, if in speaking of a worldly education—of an education for earth, such an education were meant as would fit youth for purely temporal pursuits; just as if temporal welfare were man's only end, and he had after death nothing either to fear or to hope for. This opinion is, alas! but too prevalent among men. Woe to the child whose educators entertain it, and who is thereby kept in ignorance of its own true and eternal destiny! Woe to society did this opinion become universal!

4. For man, however, to rise to an intimate union of friendship with God, it is absolutely necessary, under any circumstances, that God should first descend to him, in order to instruct and enlighten him, to strengthen and to sanctify him by light and grace from above. This is particularly requisite in man's present fallen state, where he is of himself only an object of the Divine displeasure, and moreover corrupted both in mind and body.

5. It is a task beyond the power of finite being to accomplish, to rescue him now from the grasp of sin, to dissipate the clouds which obstruct his mental vision, to restore him to his former health and vigor, and to deliver his captive will from the unholy fetters of sin and egotism. Omnipotence alone could accomplish this great work, and Omnipotence did accomplish it. The God-man, Jesus Christ, came in loving obedience to the will of his Eternal Father, and delivered himself a victim for man's redemption, establishing on earth a new institution of salvation, which is to last unto the end of time.

6. Accordingly, there is no salvation for man possible unless through Christ. Acts iv. 12. Hence, if education is really intended to attain the one great and true object of education; if it is intended to furnish the rising generations, as they succeed one another on earth, with the means and assistance requisite for securing to them their eternal happiness; it must necessarily be Christian. It must be thoroughly imbued with the spirit of Christianity, breathing forth the life and soul of Christ's religion into the young beings intrusted to it, and not coldly mentioning it to them, as one among other institutions worthy of notice. Unless the educator conducts his little ones to Christ,—their Redeemer as well as his own,—he will inevitably lead them astray.

7. Nay, if the spirit of religion is banished from education, education will not so much as promote man's temporal welfare. Without religion, there is not such a thing as true love of one's self, or of one's neighbor; not such a thing as firm and enduring attachment to king and to country; not such a thing as a sincere union of heart and hand for the advancement of the common weal.

8. As Christianity alone unites man to God, so it alone unites man to man; and the good fruits which it produces, as mentioned by the Apostle (Gal. v. 22), are "charity, joy, peace, patience, benignity, goodness, longanimity, mildness, faith, modesty, continency, chastity." The more, on the other hand, man withdraws himself from its influence, the more disastrous are the works of the flesh, enumerated by the same Apostle. Gal. v. 19, &c. Compare James, iv. 1, &c.; and these works, who can deny it, are fraught with ruin both for time and eternity.

9. This profanation of education, the banishment and neglect of religion, the foolish attempt to raise and ennoble fallen man by the sole instrumentality of his fellow-man, is the greatest bane of modern times. Men may, indeed, be sent forth into the world with fine esthetic feelings, and with a fund of the most varied information, but they belong also frequently to the class which St. Paul (Rom. i. 29, &c.) describes as filled with all iniquity, malice, fornication, covetousness, wickedness, full of envy, deceit, malignity, detractors, hateful to God, contumelious, proud, haughty, inventors of evil things, disobedient to parents, foolish, dissolute, without affection, without fidelity, &c., &c.

10. "In our schools," so writes a modern author, "Paganism predominates. Christianity has been either intentionally banished, or has been allowed to disappear, through indifference and neglect; or else, where it is still retained, it is treated as a subject of secondary importance. The atmosphere of the school is wholly that of the world. To educate, is now to make youth proficient in the arts, and to fit them for money-making. That is what is called forming good citizens; as if a man could be a good citizen without being at the same time a good Christian, and as if Christianity were not the true basis and the bulwark of Christian states and their constitutions.

166. THE IMMORTAL SOUL OF MAN.

GEORGE, LORD BYRON, born in London in 1788; died in 1824. Of all the great English poets, Byron has attained the widest popularity, with the single exception of Shakspeare. If the moral tendency of his poems were only equal to their excellence, then, indeed, we could dwell on them as masterpieces of the art of poetry, but unfortunately, the contrary is the case with most of them. Still, Byron has left behind some exquisite verses on sacred and religious subjects, one of which we here give. It is one of his beautiful Hebrew Melodies.

1. WHEN coldness wraps this suffering clay,
 Ah, whither strays the immortal mind?
 It cannot die, it cannot stay,
 But leaves its darken'd dust behind.
 Then, unembodied, doth it trace
 By steps each planet's heavenly way?
 Or fill at once the realms of space,
 A thing of eyes, that all survey?

2. Eternal, boundless, undecay'd,
 A thought unseen, but seeing all,
 All, all in earth, or skies display'd,
 Shall it survey, shall it recall :
 Each fainter trace that memory holds
 So darkly of departed years,
 In one broad glance the soul beholds,
 And all, that was, at once appears.

3. Before creation peopled earth,
 Its eye shall roll through chaos back ;
 And where the farthest heaven had birth,
 The spirit trace its rising track ;
 And where the future mars or makes,
 Its glance dilate o'er all to be,
 While sun is quench'd or system breaks,
 Fix'd in its own eternity.

4. Above, or love, hope, hate, or fear,
 It lives all passionless and pure ;
 An age shall fleet like earthly year ;
 Its years as moments shall endure.
 Away, away, without a wing,
 O'er all, through all, its thoughts shall fly ;
 A nameless and eternal thing
 Forgetting what it was to die.

167. BOOKS AS SOURCES OF SELF-CULTIVATION.

STAFF.

1. THE power of embodying and perpetuating thoughts and feelings in visible signs is assuredly one of man's most precious ornaments. By means of it, those who are now living are enabled to conjure into their presence the ancient world, as well as the most distant scenes and events of the present day, and to enjoy friendly converse with the great and wise men of every age. They may resuscitate into renewed life within themselves the wisest, the best, and the most noble thoughts and feelings which ever adorned the human mind. They have the whole treasure of the world's experience at their own disposal, and they may still follow the mightiest souls to the heights of scientific, intellectual, and moral pre-eminence, of which, without them, the world might never have had an idea.

2. Reading, however, is not unaccompanied with danger. Nay, in the present state of the literary world, abounding as it does with bad books, reading may be the source of irreparable evil. Accordingly, it is an essential duty for the educator to be most careful in his choice of books for the perusal of the youth under his charge. Let him not be led astray by fine-sounding names, and title-pages prodigal of promises, nor by praise lavished in newspapers and reviews. On the contrary, he ought to lay it down as a rule, never to give his pupils a book to read until he has himself read it quite through, and found it, upon careful examination, to be suitable for them in an intellectual, as well as in a religious and moral point of view.

3. This is a rule from which he should never depart. There are books written intentionally for the perusal of youth, and so arranged that the poison is all kept up for the last few pages, at which stage of the work it necessarily produces the most pernicious effects, since the unwary heart of the young reader has already contracted a friendship with the author. Even supposing that the latter is in every respect worthy of confidence, as a man of principle and virtue, the teacher ought not on that account to dispense himself from the rule above mentioned. All works are not intended for all readers, and no one can judge so well as he what is fit for his pupils, and what not.

4. Besides taking this care in choosing their reading-books while they are under his immediate guidance, he should, moreover, impress upon them, with all the urgency of true affection, the necessity which there is that they should in after-life be guided by the opinion of a well-informed and conscientious friend, and neither read nor purchase a book of which he disapproves. Common prudence demands this. A library, or a bookseller's shop, is like a market, stocked not only with good articles of food, but also with such as are unwholesome and poisonous. In such a market-place, no rational being would content himself with whatever came under his hand first, and greedily devour it; but he would, on the contrary, be very cautious in his purchases, in order not to buy a useless or dangerous article.

5. Among the other maladies to which human nature is subject, there is one which may be termed a reading mania. Excess in reading is injurious in many respects.

Among other writings which are not suited for the perusal of the young, those should be named which are calculated to distract their thoughts from serious occupations, and to awaken in their hearts an excessive tenderness of feeling. Even supposing the contents of such works are in themselves of an edifying nature, they are very apt to give rise to a passion for reading; and then the taste, once corrupted and accustomed to a false beauty and sweetness of style, feels disgust for wholesome nourishment, and seeks for food in silly and dangerous novels and romances.

6. Whoever labors under an inordinate desire of reading, and who, accordingly, reads without distinction every book which he can procure, will unavoidably come, sooner or later, upon bad and dangerous books. The hurried and superficial manner in which he reads is also hurtful to the mental powers. They are thereby overloaded with food, and like the body under similar circumstances, become languid and unhealthy. "Not many things, but much:" such was a maxim of the ancients on this subject.

7. Read not many books, but read one book well. It matters not how much or how little is read, but what is read should be so with a constant application of the mind. It is far better and far more profitable for the reader to study one book, so as to comprehend it thoroughly, and to see and feel the spirit and tendency of the writer, than to peruse a great number of books in such a manner as to touch only the surface.

8. This inordinate desire of reading being one of the principal distempers of the present age, the teacher should accustom his pupils to read all books slowly and with reflection, so as to be able to follow the whole train of thought, and to retain in their memory, at least the more important points and divisions of the subject. In order to do this, he should strongly advise them not to content themselves with one perusal of a book.

9. In perusing a work for the first time, the reader is too little acquainted with the author's turn of thought, and his peculiarities of character or style. He is as a traveller passing through a foreign country for the first time. The multitude and variety of new impressions he receives are apt to form only a dim and confused mass in the mind. This, however, is not the case at a second or third perusal of the same book.

10. He has already contracted an acquaintance with the author; he knows his spirit, and his manner of expressing himself; many things, which were at first dark and unintelligible, are now plain; many, which before escaped his notice altogether, now start up before him; what was clear at first becomes now more so, and is more deeply impressed upon the memory. When there is question of works of more than ordinary importance, the trouble of a third, or even more frequent perusal, is always amply repaid.

168. MAN'S DESTINY.

STAFF.

1. MAN'S destiny is immeasurably exalted. His last end is God. To rise nearer and nearer to God, not as an isolated being, but hand in hand with his fellow-men, in the bonds of brotherly love, and in the position in which Providence has placed him; such is his business here on earth. Hence the great command tells him, "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with thy whole heart, and with thy whole soul, and with thy whole mind, and thy neighbor as thyself. On these two commandments dependeth the whole law and the prophets." Matt. xxii. 37, &c.

2. The great duty of parents and educators is, then, to train up their young, and yet weak fellow-creatures, to this their noble end. No natural faculty dare be destroyed. All should be developed, but developed in such a manner as to render them directly conducive to the one end in view, which is to raise man to God.

3. At all events, none should be hinderances or obstacles to this end. Did a man speak not merely with the tongues of men, but also with those of angels, did he know all mysteries, and all knowledge, and had not charity, he were nothing. And, again, what doth it profit a man, if he gain the whole world, and suffer the loss of his own soul! 1 Cor. xiii. 1, &c.; Matt. xvi. 26.

4. Man fell, and now, in his present state of corruption, groaning, as he does at his birth, under the load of original sin, he can find salvation nowhere but in and through his Divine Redeemer, Jesus Christ. In separation from him, there is no salvation. The name of Jesus is the only name in which mortal man can be rescued from perdition. Acts iv. 12.

5. Accordingly, the work of true education is to conduct youth to Jesus Christ. He has a right to them. He paid for them with his blood. He has made them the temples of the Holy Spirit by baptism. He intrusts them for a short time to parents and teachers, and when he asks them back, he expects to find them well prepared for the fulfilment of his all-wise and loving intentions.

6. Hence emanates the great truth, which cannot be too often repeated, that education should be thoroughly religious and Christian in its external forms, as in its inward spirit. If it is ever to restore to life, and to adorn with fresh blossoms and with wholesome fruits, the withered tree of fallen humanity, it must itself be animated in all its branches by the living and life-giving breath of Christianity. Accordingly, active charity, flowing from a lively faith, or the filial love of God has been, on every occasion, during the course of this treatise held up as the point most worthy of notice, as being the arcanum, or great secret in education.

7. The end of education is to insure man's happiness for time and for eternity. This, however, it cannot do without religion. For without religion there is not such a thing as true love of self, or of one's neighbor; and without this love, no real happiness is attainable, even on this earth, either by individuals in particular, or by society in general.

8. Well, then, may the following words of an author, lately deceased, be repeated here in conclusion: "We should merit respect by our virtue; and to our virtue we should impart worth and duration by religion. Amid all the vicissitudes of life, let it be the guiding-star in our firmament. The shades of night may lower over us, rocks may surround us, still in its blessed light we will be ever able to steer on our course in safety!" Happy the world, if both educators and educated reduced this advice to practice!

169. BINGEN ON THE RHINE.

HON. MRS. NORTON.

CAROLINE ELIZABETH SARAH NORTON, a grand-daughter of the famous Richard Brinsley Sheridan, is only second to Mrs. Hemans among the female poets of our age. She has been called "the Byron of female poets," and although her poetry may not have all the wild passion that breathes in Byron's, it is characterized by a depth and intensity of feeling that raise it far above what is usually written by females.

I.

A SOLDIER of the Legion lay dying in Algiers,
 There was lack of woman's nursing, there was dearth of woman's tears;
 But a comrade stood beside him, while his life-blood ebb'd away,
 And bent, with pitying glances, to hear what he might say.
 The dying soldier falter'd, as he took that comrade's hand,
 And he said, "I never more shall see my own, my native land;

Take a message, and a token, to some distant friends of mine,
For I was born at Bingen—at Bingen on the Rhine.

II.

“Tell my brothers and companions, when they meet and crowd around
To hear my mournful story in the pleasant vineyard ground,
That we fought the battle bravely, and when the day was done,
Full many a corse lay ghastly pale, beneath the setting sun.
And midst the dead and dying, were some grown old in wars,
The death-wound on their gallant breasts, the last of many scars ;
But some were young—and suddenly beheld life’s morn decline ;
And one had come from Bingen—fair Bingen on the Rhine !

III.

“Tell my mother that her other sons shall comfort her old age,
And I was aye a truant bird, that thought his home a cage :
For my father was a soldier, and even as a child
My heart leap’d forth to hear him tell of struggles fierce and wild ;
And when he died, and left us to divide his scanty hoard,
I let them take whate’er they would, but kept my father’s sword,
And with boyish love I hung it where the bright light used to shine,
On the cottage-wall at Bingen—calm Bingen on the Rhine !

IV.

“Tell my sister not to weep for me, and sob with drooping head,
When the troops are marching home again, with glad and gallant tread ;

But to look upon them proudly, with a calm and steadfast
eye,

For her brother was a soldier, too, and not afraid to die.

And if a comrade seek her love, I ask her in my name

To listen to him kindly, without regret or shame ;

And to hang the old sword in its place (my father's sword and mine),

For the honor of old Bingen—dear Bingen on the Rhine !

V.

“There's another—not a sister ; in the happy days gone by,
You'd have known her by the merriment that sparkled in her
eye ;

Too innocent for coquetry,—too fond for idle scorning,—

Oh ! friend, I fear the lightest heart makes sometimes heaviest mourning ;

Tell her the last night of my life (for ere the moon be risen

My body will be out of pain—my soul be out of prison),

I dream'd I stood with her, and saw the yellow sunlight shine

On the vine-clad hills of Bingen—fair Bingen on the Rhine !

VI.

“I saw the blue Rhine sweep along—I heard, or seem'd to hear,

The German songs we used to sing, in chorus sweet and clear ;

And down the pleasant river, and up the slanting hill,

The echoing chorus sounded, through the evening calm and still ;

And her glad blue eyes were on me as we passed with friendly talk

Down many a path beloved of yore, and well-remember'd walk,

And her little hand lay lightly, confidingly in mine :

But we'll meet no more at Bingen—loved Bingen on the Rhine !”

VII.

His voice grew faint and hoarser—his grasp was childish weak,—

His eyes put on a dying look,—he sigh'd and ceased to speak ;

His comrade bent to lift him, but the spark of life had fled,—
The soldier of the Legion, in a foreign land—was dead !

And the soft moon rose up slowly, and calmly she look'd down

On the red sand of the battle-field, with bloody corpses strown ;

Yea, calmly on that dreadful scene her pale light seem'd to shine,

As it shone on distant Bingen—fair Bingen on the Rhine !

170. ON GOOD BREEDING.

A N O N .

1. As learning, honor, and virtue are absolutely necessary to gain you the esteem and admiration of mankind, politeness and good breeding are equally necessary to make you agreeable in conversation and common life. Great talents are above the generality of the world, who neither possess them themselves, nor judge of them rightly in others ; but all people are judges of the smaller talents, such as civility, affability, and an obliging, agreeable address and manner, because they feel the effects of them, as making society easy and pleasing.

2. Good sense must, in many cases, determine good breeding ; but there are some general rules of it that always hold true. For example, it is extremely rude not to give proper attention, and a civil answer, when people speak to you ; or to go away, or be doing something else, while they are speaking to you ; for that convinces them that you despise them, and do not think it worth your while to hear or answer what they say. It is also very rude to take the best place in a room, or to seize immediately upon what you like at table, without offering first to help others, as if you considered nobody but yourself. On the contrary, you should always endeavor to procure all the conveniences you can to the people you are with.

3. Besides being civil, which is absolutely necessary, the perfection of good breeding is to be civil with ease, and in a becoming manner; awkwardness can proceed but from two causes, either from not having kept good company, or from not having attended to it. Attention is absolutely necessary for improving in behavior, as, indeed, it is for every thing else. If an awkward person drinks tea or coffee, he often scalds his mouth, and lets either the cup or the saucer fall, and spills the tea or coffee on his clothes.

4. At dinner his awkwardness distinguishes itself particularly, as he has more to do. There he holds his knife, fork, and spoon differently from other people; eats with his knife, to the great danger of his lips; picks his teeth with his fork; and puts his spoon, which has been in his mouth twenty times, into the dishes again. If he is to carve, he can never hit the joint; but, in his vain efforts to cut through the bone, scatters the sauce in everybody's face. He generally daubs himself with soup and grease, though his napkin is commonly stuck through a button-hole and tickles his chin. When he drinks, he coughs in his glass, and besprinkles the company.

5. Besides all this, he has strange tricks and gestures, such as snuffing up his nose, making faces, putting his fingers in his nose, or blowing it, so as greatly to disgust the company. His hands are troublesome to him when he has not something in them; and he does not know where to put them, but keeps them in perpetual motion. All this, I own, is not in any degree criminal; but it is highly disagreeable and ridiculous in company, and ought most carefully to be guarded against by every one that desires to please.

6. There is, likewise, an awkwardness of expression and words which ought to be avoided, such as false English, bad pronunciation, old sayings, and vulgar proverbs, which are so many proofs of a poor education. For example, if, instead of saying that tastes are different, and that every man has his own peculiar one, you should repeat a vulgar proverb, and say that "what is one man's meat is another man's poison," or else, "Every one to his liking, as the good man said when he kissed his cow," the company would be persuaded that you had never associated with any but low persons.

7. To mistake or forget names, to speak of "What-d'ye-call-him," or "Thingum," or "How-d'ye-call her," is excessively awkward and vulgar. To begin a story or narration when you are not perfect in it, and cannot go through with it, but are forced, possibly, to say in the middle of it, "I have forgotten the rest," is very unpleasant and bungling. One must be extremely exact, clear, and perspicuous in every thing one says; otherwise, instead of entertaining or informing others, one only tires and puzzles them.

8. The voice and manner of speaking, too, are not to be neglected. Some people almost shut their mouths when they speak, and mutter so that they are not to be understood; others speak so fast, and sputter, that they are equally unintelligible. Some always speak as loud as if they were talking to deaf people; and others so low that one cannot hear them. All these, and many other habits, are awkward and disagreeable, and are to be avoided by attention. You cannot imagine how necessary it is to mind all these little things. I have seen many people with great talents ill received for want of having these little talents of good breeding; and others well received only from their little talents, and who had no great ones.

171. THE ANCIENT TOMBS.

FRANCES BROWN:

FRANCES BROWN was born in Stranorlar, county Donegal, in 1816. She was afflicted with small-pox when about a year and a half old, by which she lost her sight. At the age of seven years she began to educate herself, by asking of all her friends about her the meanings of words and things. From hearing her brothers and sisters repeat their daily tasks in grammar and spelling, she learnt the same lessons, and invariably knew them before the others. Her memory was so retentive, that to induce her friends to read for her the more thoughtful books for which they had no taste, she used to relate stories of her own composition,—or do the house-bold work which was allotted to them. The sight of the visible world having been shut against her, her clear natural intellect devised a mode by which she learned to see into the world of thought. The greater portion of her poems appeared in the "Athenæum,"—from the editor of which she has experienced kindness and encouragement.

1. THEY rise on isle and ocean shore,
They stand by lake and stream,
And blend with many a shepherd's tale,
And many a poet's dream ;
Where darkly lowers the northern pine,
Where the bright myrtle blooms,
And on the desert's trackless sands,
Arise the ancient tombs.
2. The hands that raised them, long ago,
In death and dust have slept,
And long the grave hath seal'd the founts
Of eyes that o'er them wept ;
But still they stand, like sea-marks left
Amid the passing waves
Of generations, that go down
To their forgotten graves.
3. For many an early nation's steps
Have pass'd from hill and plain ;
Their homes are gone, their deeds forgot,
But still their tombs remain—
To tell, when time hath left no trace
Of tower or storied page,
Our ancient earth how glorious was
Her early heritage.
4. They tell us of the lost and mourn'd,
When earth was new to tears ;
The bard that left his tuneful lyre,
The chief that left his spears ;
Ah! were their lights of love and fame
On those dark altars shed,
To keep undimm'd through time and change,
The memory of the dead ?

5. If so, alas for love's bright tears !
And for ambition's dreams,
For earth hath kept their monuments
But lost the sleepers' names :
They live no more in story's scroll,
Or song's inspiring breath ;
For altars raised to human fame
Have turn'd to shrines of death.
6. But from your silence, glorious graves,
What mystic voices rise,
That thus, through passing ages speak
Their lessons to the wise !
Behold, how still the world rewards
Her brightest, as of yore ;
For then she gave a nameless grave—
And now she gives no more.
-

172. EXECUTION OF SIR THOMAS MORE.

[From the Historical Novel of ALICE SHERWIN.]

1. HIS beloved daughter Margaret, knowing she would not again be admitted within the precincts of the Tower, had paced the wharf for more than an hour ; when she at length perceived him, she burst through the billmen, and throwing herself on his neck, murmured, in a broken voice, " Oh, my father ! oh, my father ! "

2. " Where is thy fortitude, my best jewel ? " said More tenderly pressing his lips to her cheek. " Let this console thee, Margaret, that I suffer in innocence, and by the will of God ; to whose blessed pleasure, thou, my child, must accommodate thyself, and not only be patient under thy loss, but lead thy poor weak mother and thy sisters to follow thy example. And now retire ; I would not have thy best feelings become the scoff and jibe of a brutal guard. "

3. His daughter prepared to obey ; but had not proceeded ten steps, when, forgetful of all fortitude and self-control, she turned back, and falling on his neck, kissed him again and again. Sir Thomas did not speak ; but notwithstanding his efforts at firmness tears fell rapidly from his eyes ; neither was it until his adopted daughter, Margaret Clement, had loosened her arms by force, she could be separated from her father. Dorothy Collie, her maid, who had been brought up in the family, also threw herself on her knees at her master's feet, covering his hand with kisses.

4. The space between his trial and execution was employed by More in prayer, meditation, and the severest corporal mortifications ; he continually walked about with a sheet around him, so as to familiarize himself to the thought of death. He contrived to write a few lines with a coal to his daughter Margaret, expressing his earnest desire to suffer on the following day, which was the vigil of St. Thomas of Canterbury, and sending her his hair-shirt. Strange to say, early the next morning he received a visit from Sir Thomas Pope, who with much pain informed him he was to suffer at nine o'clock, adding that by the king's pardon his sentence was changed into beheading, because he had borne the highest office in the realm, and that he (Pope) was desired to be the messenger of the royal mercy.

5. "Well," said Sir Thomas, with his usual good humor, "God forbid the king should extend any more such mercy to those I hold dear, and preserve my posterity from similar pardons ! For the rest, Master Pope, I thank you for your tidings ; I am bound to his grace, who, by putting me here, has afforded me time and opportunity to prepare for my end. I beseech you, my good friend, to move his majesty that my daughter Roper may be present at my burial."

6. "The king is content," said Pope, deeply moved, "that all your family should attend, provided you use not many words on the scaffold."

"It is well I was informed," said More ; "for I had purposed to have spoken ; but I am ready to conform to his highness' pleasure. Nay, quiet yourself, good Master Pope,"

he continued, as the other wrung his hand ; "for I trust we shall yet live and love God together in eternal bliss."

7. When he was alone, More carefully attired himself in a gown of silk camlet, which he had received as a present from one Anthony Bonvise, a merchant of Lucca : it was so costly that Sir William Kingston advised him not to wear it, as he whose property it would become was but a javill (villain).

"Shall I account him a javill," said More, "who is this day to work me so singular a benefit? Nay, if it were cloth-of-gold, I should think it well bestowed. Did not St. Cyprian, the martyred Bishop of Carthage, bestow on his executioner thirty pieces? and shall I grudge a garment?"

8. Kingston, however, persisted; yet, although Sir Thomas yielded, he sent the headsman an angel out of his scanty store, to prove he bore him no ill-will.

When the crowd assembled round the scaffold on Tower Hill caught sight of their former favorite, his beard unshaved, his face pale and sharpened, and holding a red cross in his hand, they pressed eagerly around him, while audible expressions of indignation were heard on every side. A poor woman pushed through the throng, offering him a cup of wine; but he gently put her aside, saying, "Christ at His Passion drank not wine, but gall and vinegar."

He, however, met with many insults. One female cried out that he had wrongfully judged her cause when lord chancellor; to which he calmly replied, that "if he were now to give sentence, he would not alter his decision."

9. While preparing to mount the scaffold, an unwonted bustle took place at the very verge of the dense mass, and it was evident the guards were endeavoring to keep some person back; their halberds, however, were beaten aside, and with almost superhuman strength a man forced himself through the press, grasping the prisoner's robe as he prepared to ascend the steps, and demanding with the voice and action of a maniac, "Do you know me, More? do you know the man you rescued from the devil? Pray for me! pray for me! I have wandered round your prison; if I had seen you, you had cured me again."

10. "It is John Hales of Winchester," said one of the guard. "He says Sir Thomas More cured him by his prayers of the black fever, and that since he has been in confinement the fits have returned worse than ever."

"He did more for me," said Hales, tenaciously retaining his hold, "than all the college of physicians. Pray for me, More ! pray for me ! Do you not remember me ?"

"I do remember you," said More soothingly ; "I will pray for you on the scaffold : go and live in peace ; the fits will not return."

11. The man obeyed ; when the prisoner finding himself too weak to ascend, said to Kingston, who was by his side, "I beseech you, see me safe up ; my coming down I will take care of myself."

He then knelt, and recited the Miserere ; after which he embraced the executioner, saying, "No mortal man could have done me a greater service than thou wilt this day. Pluck up thy spirit, and fear not to perform thy office. My neck is very short ; take heed thou strike not awry, to save thy credit."

12. He covered his eyes himself, and laying his head on the block, removed his beard, saying, "This at least never committed treason."

There was a dull heavy sound, a gush of warm bright blood, and the soul of Sir Thomas More passed to God upon the very day which he had so earnestly desired.

173. THE INFLUENCE OF DEVOTION ON THE HAPPINESS OF LIFE.

BLAIR.

DR. HUGH BLAIR, born in Edinburgh, in 1718 ; died in 1800. He is best known by his "Lectures on Rhetoric." Though somewhat hard and dry in style and manner, this work forms a useful guide to the young student. Dr. Blair is also known as the author of a learned and elaborate dissertation on MacPherson's "Poems of Ossian."

1. WHATEVER promotes and strengthens virtue, whatever calms and regulates the temper, is a source of happiness. Devotion produces these effects in a remarkable degree. It inspires composure of spirit, mildness, and benignity; weakens the painful, and cherishes the pleasing emotions; and, by these means, carries on the life of a pious man in a smooth and placid tenor.

2. Besides exerting this habitual influence on the mind, devotion opens a field of enjoyments to which the vicious are entire strangers; enjoyments the more valuable, as they peculiarly belong to retirement, when the world leaves us; and to adversity, when it becomes our foe. These are the two seasons, for which every wise man would most wish to provide some hidden store of comfort.

3. For let him be placed in the most favorable situation which the human state admits, the world can neither always amuse him, nor always shield him from distress. There will be many hours of vacuity, and many of dejection in his life. If he be a stranger to God, and to devotion, how dreary will the gloom of solitude often prove! With what oppressive weight will sickness, disappointment, or old age, fall upon his spirits.

4. But for those pensive periods, the pious man has a relief prepared. From the tiresome repetition of the common vanities of life, or from the painful corrosion of its cares and sorrows, devotion transports him into a new region; and surrounds him there with such objects as are the most fitted to cheer the dejection, to calm the tumults, and to heal the wounds of his heart. If the world has been empty and delusive, it gladdens him with the prospect of a higher and better order of things about to rise.

5. If men have been ungrateful and base, it displays before him the faithfulness of that Supreme Being, who, though every other friend fail, will never forsake him. Let us consult our experience, and we shall find, that the two greatest sources of inward joy, are, the exercise of love directed towards a deserving object, and the exercise of hope terminating on some high and assured happiness. Both these are supplied by devotion; and therefore we have no reason to be surprised, if, on some occasions, it fills the hearts of good men with a satisfaction not to be expressed.

6. The refined pleasures of a pious mind are, in many respects, superior to the coarse gratifications of sense. They are pleasures which belong to the highest powers and best affections of the soul; whereas the gratifications of sense reside in the lowest region of our nature. To the latter, the soul stoops below its native dignity. The former, raise it above itself. The latter, leave always a comfortless, often a mortifying remembrance behind them. The former, are reviewed with applause and delight.

7. The pleasures of sense resemble a foaming torrent, which after a disorderly course, speedily runs out, and leaves an empty and offensive channel. But the pleasures of devotion resemble the equable current of a pure river, which enlivens the fields through which it passes, and diffuses verdure and fertility along its banks.

8. To thee, O Devotion! we owe the highest improvement of our nature, and much of the enjoyment of our life. Thou art the support of our virtue, and the rest of our souls, in this turbulent world. Thou composest the thoughts. Thou calmest the passions. Thou exaltest the heart. Thy communications, and thine only, are imparted to the low, no less than to the high; to the poor, as well as to the rich.

9. In thy presence worldly distinctions cease; and under thy influence, worldly sorrows are forgotten. Thou art the balm of the wounded mind. Thy sanctuary is ever open to the miserable; inaccessible only to the unrighteous and impure. Thou beginnest on earth the temper of heaven. In thee, the hosts of angels and blessed spirits eternally rejoice.

174. ON PRIDE.

POPE.

ALEXANDER POPE was born in London in 1688; died in 1744. As a poet, Pope holds a first place. In his "Rape of the Lock" he has blended the most delicate satire with the most lively fancy, and produced the finest and most brilliant mock-heroic poem in the world. His "Essay on Man," "Essay on Criticism," and "Temple of Fame," are each unsurpassed in beauty and elegance of style.

1. OF all the causes which conspire to blind
Man's erring judgment, and misguide the mind,
What the weak head with strongest bias rules,
Is pride, the never-failing vice of fools.
Whatever nature has in worth denied,
She gives in large recruits of needful pride !
For, as in bodies, thus in souls, we find
What wants in blood and spirits, swell'd with wind.
Pride, where wit fails, steps in to our defence,
And fills up all the mighty void of sense.
2. If once right reason drives that cloud away,
Truth breaks upon us with resistless day.
Trust not yourself ; but, your defects to know,
Make use of every friend—and every foe.
A little learning is a dangerous thing ;
Drink deep, or taste not the Pierian spring:
There shallow draughts intoxicate the brain ;
And drinking largely sobers it again.
3. Fired at first sight with what the muse imparts,
In fearless youth we tempt the heights of arts,
While, from the bounded level of our mind,
Short views we take, nor see the lengths behind ;
But more advanced, behold, with strange surprise,
New distant scenes of endless science rise !
So, pleased at first the towering Alps we try,
Mount o'er the vales, and seem to tread the sky ;
Th' eternal snows appear already past,
And the first clouds and mountains seem the last ;
But, those attain'd, we tremble to survey
The growing labors of the lengthen'd way ;
Th' increasing prospect tires our wondering eyes ;
Hills peep o'er hills, and Alps on Alps arise.

175. ADHERENCE TO PRINCIPLE COMMANDS RESPECT.

MISS BROWNSON.

SARAH H. BROWNSON, daughter of Dr. O. A. Brownson, though still young in years, has already evinced considerable talent for literary composition. Her "Marian Elwood," published anonymously, with other smaller works, which have only met the eyes of her friends, indicate a range of ability far in advance of the writer's age. "Marian Elwood" is the only one of Miss Brownson's works yet published, but it has a vigor of thought, and a richness of fancy, which must at once strike the reader.

1. WHEN Marian had finished her breakfast, she lounged carelessly to the windows, and after looking at her watch several times, went to her own room. At a quarter before nine, she appeared in the hall. "Where are you going?" asked Mr. Weston.

"To church. Am I not to have the pleasure of your escort as far at least as the door?"

2. "If you leave this house, and enter a papist temple, you shall never return to it."

"Polite, on my word. And what will you say to my mother?"

"What shall I say," he thundered, "what shall I say? I'll tell her you've come to bring dishonor on a respectable house, disgrace to an honorable man! What shall I say to her? I'll tell her of your insults—your—stay!"

3. "Uncle, listen a moment—listen to a little reason—"

"I'll hear nothing from you. Be still—"

"You must. Listen, I am a Roman Catholic."

"At home you may be; but in this house I have no idolaters."

"As a Roman Catholic I am bound to obey my Church."

"And her vile, crafty priests."

"I have no time nor patience to hear your free, candid opinions," Marian said, her color rising. "I am willing to give you my reasons for acting as I am about to do; if you will listen, and show yourself a gentleman, and an enlightened one, very well; if you will not listen to what I wish to say, you will prove yourself prejudiced, bigoted, and narrow-minded." His very rage prevented him from answering.

4. "But," she continued, "you are none of the three. My religion, which I firmly believe, and am, therefore, bound in conscience to practise—my religion commands me to attend church every Sunday. And, think you, because the way is hard, I am to disobey? If I practise my religion when my mother's carriage drives me to the church door, and I have soft cushions to rest on, shall I desert it when I have a long walk to take, exposed to the wondering eyes of a handful of prejudiced country people? If I do that, do you think I am worthy the name of Catholic?"

5. "But it is no religion; it is the mask for crafty Jesuits, and—and—"

"Whatever this religion may be in your eyes, in mine it is my Redeemer's. If you believe it is a crime for you to—to—enter that parlor, and because I tell you it is absurd for you to imagine such a thing; if the whole world rises up and laughs at you for being afraid to enter your own parlor, and you, still believing you are committing a crime, should enter to avoid ridicule—"

6. "But that is not the same. You need not fancy you are about to commit a crime. You must know all our little town is on tiptoe to see you, and I intended satisfying their vulgar curiosity. If you are not with me, a thousand questions will be asked. I shall be forced to acknowledge that you went to—a—popish gathering. In an instant, you will be made a mark for scorn. You do not know the prejudices of our little village."

7. "'They are on tiptoe to see me!' Is a church then the place for me to exhibit myself? Am I then to break the laws of my church, listen not to the voice of my conscience, violate my duty to my God, because people want to look at me? Shame on you, uncle!"

"I did not mean that at all—but after meeting—"

8. "I will dress myself in my prettiest costume, and with Catherine as a guide, go to meet you, and I promise to endure, without a shade of scorn, the whole battery of your friends' eyes. If they ask questions, are you to shrink? Are you not man enough to say your niece follows her own conscience, in preference to their prejudices? They'll scorn me. Let them. I should scorn myself had I not principle, religion, and character enough to do my duty in the face of a whole world's opposition. I know it is mortifying to you—I am sorry it is, but I must go.”

9. “You are determined?”

“I am, sir.”

“You are right,” he answered, “and it shall never be said that James Weston could not appreciate firmness, though in an erring cause. I will go with you.”

176. MOUNT LEBANON AND ITS CEDARS.

PATTERSON.

JAMES LAIRD PATTERSON, M. A., an English gentleman, who a few years since made a visit to the Holy Land, and published an interesting account of his “Tour in Egypt, Palestine, and Syria.” After visiting the holy places, Mr. Patterson became a convert to the Catholic faith.

1. ABOUT seven we were in motion, and had a most delightful ride over the crest of Lebanon. The view of the valley and Anti-Lebanon, and of the amphitheatre on the west side, is magnificent. We passed through several patches of snow, and found the air proportionately cold. From the crest of the mountain, the broad valley of B'scherri looks like a rocky glen: the village of that name, and Eden, appeared to the right. Higher up the valley spreads, and near the right flanking mountains the deep green cedars are nestled.

2. The cedars appear about two hundred in number, of which some eight or ten are very large. We measured three of the largest, and found them respectively thirty-seven feet ten inches, twenty-eight feet, and thirty-one feet in girth. On the north side of the four knolls on which the cedars stand (and in the midst of which our tent is pitched) is a deep ravine.

3. The general effect from here is beautiful. On the whole, I should say that the associations and the general effect of the cedars render them well worth a visit; but, in themselves, travellers have a little overrated them. This evening we have been watching the sunset from one of the trees, in the fork of whose huge branches, or rather trunks, we sat. Between two of these we had a view of the valley and sea-horizon beyond, lit up by the changing sunset lights, and of one single bright star, among the delicate foliage of the trees, which I shall not easily forget.

4. We left the cedars with some regret that we had not resolved at once to stay there some days. I went up to the chapel, and the priest came to me, as I was going away, and gave me the benediction, laying the gospels on my head. He also made me a present of a small cornelian antique seal, which I shall cherish as a pleasant remembrance of him and his mountain charge.

5. At eight o'clock we started for Duman, a summer residence of the patriarch of the Maronites, where he now is. To reach it, we had to cross the head of the valley, and descend it for three or four miles on the south side. As we got lower, we found the ground more cultivated and very fertile, and the views most beautiful. Looking back, we saw the glen or ravine of gray limestone rocks, along which we were scrambling, terminated in an advanced amphitheatre of richly-tinted sandstone, above the centre of which the deep-green cedar grove was seen; while, far above, the grand semicircle of the highest range of Lebanon swept round. Its warm coloring was patched with snow here and there, contrasting with wonderful beauty with the deep sky above.

6. Looking before us, the winding glen yawned below. Its broken gray crags are set off by verdant patches of corn, and by vineyards and mulberry groves, and intersected in a thousand places by clear streams of water, glittering in the sun. But if nature, thus prodigal of beauty, charmed the way, much more was it beguiled by the moral aspect of the inhabitants of Lebanon. At every mile we saw the small chapel, neatly built of squared stones, surmounted by its modest bell-gable; at every turn the courteous but hearty greeting of the peasants, a cheery pleasant-faced race, reminded us that we were once more in a Catholic country.

177. THE SIEGE OF QUEBEC BY MONTGOMERY.

1. MONTGOMERY divided his troops into four bodies. The first, composed of Colonel Livingston's Canadians, was to make a feigned attack in the direction of St. John's Gate ; the second corps, commanded by Major Brown, was ordered to threaten the citadel. Whilst the garrison, watching the movements of these two divisions, should be occupied with the defence of the Upper Town, the two other corps, charged with the real attack, were to penetrate into the Lower Town, and afterwards to the Upper, which the Americans believed open on that side.

2. Colonel Arnold, with 450 men from St. Roch's suburbs, was charged to remove the barricades and batteries at Sant-au-Matlot ; General Montgomery had reserved to himself the strongest column, to remove the barrier of Pres-de-Ville, and enter the place by Champlain-street. At two in the morning all the troops were assembled ; some had stuck in their hats little branches of fir, in order to recognize each other amongst the enemy ; others, scraps of paper, with the words, "Liberty or death !" They went and placed themselves in the different posts assigned them.

3. Montgomery descended by way of Foulon, and advanced with his column along the shore as far as Mother Cove, where he stopped to give the signal for all the columns to march to the attack. It was near four o'clock in the morning. Two rockets were sent off, and immediately the several signals given by the assailants were perceived by the sentinels of the city, who gave the alarm. On reaching their post, the troops charged with the defence of the ramparts on the land side encountered a strong fire of musketry, which they answered briskly.

4. Meanwhile Montgomery, followed by his officers, had commenced his march at the head of his column, which was of considerable length. The windingpath up which he proceeded, hollowed between the river and a perpendicular rock, was scarcely wide enough for one man to pass ; he was, besides, embarrassed by icebergs, which the tide had there accumulated, and by the falling snow. Nevertheless, Montgomery reached the first barrier of Pres-de-Ville, which he crossed without difficulty ; but the second was defended by a masked battery of seven pieces of cannon, and a guard of fifty men, commanded by Capt. Chabot. The artillerymen stood at their guns, match in hand, waiting the appearance of the enemy.

5. Montgomery was surprised on seeing this post so well prepared to receive him. He paused a moment, when about fifty yards from the battery, as if to consult those who followed him, then all together they darted towards the barricade. When they got within a few paces of it, Captain Chabot gave the order to fire. Cries and groans followed this terrible discharge. Montgomery, his two aides-de-camp, and several officers and soldiers, had fallen under that raking fire. Colonel Campbell, on whom devolved the command of the column, seeing the terror and confusion of his men, without attempting to make any assault on the barrier, without even firing a shot, ordered a retreat, which was a real flight.

6. At this moment Col. Arnold, having traversed St. Roch's and the Palace, advanced to force the first barricade that blocked up the old Saut-au-Matelot-street, when, passing under the ramparts of the Upper Town, from whence a brisk fire was kept up, he was struck by a ball that fractured his leg. He was replaced by Captain Morgan, a former wig-maker of Quebec, but a very brave officer, who marched right on the barrier, scaled it, after wounding the sentinel, and took it away, with all its defenders. He lost but one man in this attack, the Canadian, namely, who had served him for a guide, and whose death obliged him to postpone his march till daylight. He was rejoined soon after by Lieutenant-Colonel Green and the rest of the column at the moment when a singular scene was taking place among his soldiers. Some of the townspeople, awoke by the drums beating the recall, ran in haste to the Saut-au-Matelot, where they were to assemble in case of an attack, when, meeting the Americans, the latter held out their hands, crying, "Liberty forever !" Some escaped, others were retained as prisoners.

7. At daybreak the enemy's column occupied all the houses from the barrier it had removed to the second, which was placed in St. John's-street, two hundred paces further on. A handful of Canadians, who had thrown themselves forward, defended the ground foot by foot with much obstinacy, despite the great superiority of their enemies, who cried several times, naming some of the citizens, "Friends, are you there?" On reaching the last barrier they put up ladders to cross it, but the fire of its defenders became so deadly, that they were forced to retire and take refuge in the houses. Then a militiaman of the town, named Charland, a man as robust as he was intrepid, advanced amid a shower of bullets, and drew the ladders inside the barricade. This barrier was defended by the company of Captain Dumas, engaged at the moment with the Americans, who were firing from the houses. The combatants thus placed formed an angle, of which the side parallel with the cape was occupied by the assailants, and the side cutting the line of the cape at right angles and running to the river, was defended by the besieged, who had a battery on their right. Capt. Dumas soon beheld coming to his assistance Capt. Marcoux's Canadians, artillerymen and English infantry.

8. General Carleton, having learned the retreat of the column which had attacked Pres-de-Ville, and seeing by their manœuvres that the troops which had threatened St. John's Gate and Cape Diamond had not meant to make a serious attack, concentrated his principal forces on the Saut-au-Matelot. He ordered Captain Laws to take 200 men, to leave the Upper Town by Palace Gate, and plunging right into St. Charles-street and the old Saut-au-Matelot-street, to attack the enemy vigorously in the rear. He, at the same time, charged Captain McDougall to support him with his company. Laws entered a house where he found several American officers in consultation. Seeing him, they drew their swords, but he told them he was at the head of a strong detachment, and that they would all be massacred if they did not surrender immediately; this they did, after satisfying themselves, by looking through a window, that he was actually followed by a large number of men.

9. Gen. Carleton had likewise sent an order to Major Nairne and Captain Dambourges to go with a strong detachment to sustain the troops who were fighting in the Lower Town. When they reached that point it was resolved to assume the offensive, and attack the houses held by the enemy. Immediately Captain Dambourges and the Canadians leaped over the barricades, and placed their ladders against the first house occupied by the Americans, which was carried. Major Nairne did as much on his side. These two officers thus took the houses one after the other. The Americans found themselves assailed on all sides at once. Hemmed in in front, briskly attacked from the rear, surrounded by superior forces, having their line of retreat cut off, they vainly held out for some time ; they were forced to lay down their arms. Arnold's whole column were taken prisoners ; and the governor, profiting by his victory, carried St. Roch's battery, which had never ceased firing on the city during the attack.

10. The fire had been very brisk at Saut-au-Matelot, and the loss there was believed considerable ; but it was happily found to be very trifling. That of the Americans was great in prisoners, and the fall of Montgomery was irretrievable. His body was found half buried under the snow, with twelve others, at a short distance from the barrier by which he had hoped to make his way into the city. The officers of his army, who were prisoners, and not knowing what had become of him, having recognized his sword in the hands of an officer of the garrison, were no longer uncertain as to his fate, and burst into tears. The governor had him decently interred inside the city, with military honors, desiring thereby to honor the memory of a general who had distinguished himself by his moderation and humanity ever since he had commanded the troops of Congress.

CHAMPLAIN.

H. J. MORGAN.

HENRY J. MORGAN, a Canadian writer, author of a work entitled "Biographies of Celebrated Canadians."

1. SAMUEL DE CHAMPLAIN, a name rendered illustrious in our annals from his services in not only founding the ancient city of Quebec, but in establishing Canada ; in spreading civilization, repelling the attacks of the hordes of Indians, and thus saving the lives of the early French settlers ; in exploring the country and its valuable resources, and thus bringing its name conspicuously before not only his own nation, but many others.

2. He was of a noble family of Brouage, in the province of Saintonge, in France. He commanded a vessel, in which he made a voyage to the East Indies about the year 1600, and acquired a high reputation as an able and experienced officer. After an absence of two years and a-half he returned to France, at a time when it was resolved to prosecute the discoveries which had been commenced in Canada by Cartier. The Marquis de la Roche, and Chauvin, governors of Canada, had endeavored to establish a colony, and the latter was succeeded by De Chatte, who engaged Champlain in his service in 1603. Champlain sailed March 16th, accompanied by Pontgravé, who had made many voyages to Tadoussac, at the entrance of the Saguenay into the St. Lawrence. After their arrival at this place, 25th May, they, in a light bateau, ascended the St. Lawrence to the Falls of St. Louis, which bounded the discoveries of Cartier in 1535. This was in the neighborhood of Hochelaga, but that Indian settlement was not then in existence. After making many inquiries of the natives, and exploring much of the country along the St. Lawrence, he sailed for France in August. On his arrival in September, he found that De Chatte was dead, and his commission as Lieutenant-General of Canada given to the Sieur De Monts. This nobleman engaged him as his pilot in another voyage to the New World.

3. Champlain sailed on his second voyage March 7th, 1604, and arrived at L'Acadie May 6th. After being employed about a month in the long boat, visiting the coast, in order to find a proper situation for a settlement, he pitched upon a small island about twenty leagues to the westward of St. John's river, and about half a league in circumference. To this island De Monts, after his arrival at the place, gave the name of St. Croix. It lies in the river of the same name, which divides the United States from the province of New Brunswick. During the winter, Champlain was occupied in exploring the country, and he went as far as Cape Cod, where he gave the name of Malebarre to a point of land, on account of the imminent danger he ran of running aground near it with his bark. Next year he pursued his discoveries, though he did not pass more than ten or twelve leagues beyond Malebarre.

4. In 1607 he was sent out on another voyage to Tadoussac, accompanied by Pontgravé. In July, 1608, he laid the foundation of Quebec. He was a man who did not embarrass himself with commerce, and who felt no interest in traffic with the Indians, which proved so profitable to many engaged in it. Being intrusted with the charge of establishing a permanent colony, he examined the most eligible places for settlement, and selected a spot upon the St. Lawrence, at the confluence of that river with the small River St. Charles, about 410 miles from the sea. The river in this place was very much contracted, and it was on this account that the natives called it Quebec (although various surmises are advanced by historians and others as to the origin of this name). Here he arrived on the 3d of July. He erected barracks, cleared the ground, sowed wheat and rye, and laid the foundation of the "Gibraltar of America."

5. In the summer of the year 1609, when the Hurons, Algonquins, and others, were about to march against their common enemy, the Iroquois, Champlain very readily joined them, having a keen taste for adventures; and he hoped, by a conquest, to impress all the Indian tribes with strong ideas of the power of the French, and to secure an alliance with them. He embarked on the River Sorel, which was then called the Iroquois, because those savages usually descended by that stream into Canada. At the Falls of Chambly he was stopped, and was obliged to send back his boat. Only two Frenchmen remained with him. He ascended with his allies in the Indian canoes to the lake, to which he gave his own name, which it retains to the present day. The savages whom he accompanied hoped to surprise the Iroquois in the villages, but they met them unexpectedly upon the lake. After gaining the land, it was agreed to defer the battle till the next day, as the night was now approaching. On the morning of the 30th July, Champlain placed a party, with his two Frenchmen, in a neighboring wood, so as to come upon the enemy in flank. The Iroquois, who were about 200 in number, seeing but a handful of men, were sure of victory. But as soon as the battle began, Champlain killed two of their chiefs, who were conspicuous by their plumes, by the first discharge of his fire-lock, loaded with four balls. The report and the execution of the fire-arms filled the Iroquois with inexpressible consternation. They were quickly put to flight, and the victorious allies returned to Quebec with fifty scalps.

6. In September, 1609, Champlain embarked with Pontgravé for France, leaving the colony under the care of a brave man, Pierre Chauvin. But he was soon sent out again to the New World. He sailed from Honfleur April 8th, 1610, and arrived at Tadoussac on the 26th. He encouraged the Montagnais Indians, who lived at that place, to engage in a second expedition against the Iroquois. Accordingly, soon after his arrival at Quebec, they sent him about sixty warriors. At the head of these and others he proceeded up the River Sorel. The enemy were soon met, and after a severe engagement, in which Champlain was wounded by an arrow, were entirely defeated. He arrived at Quebec, from Montreal, June 19th, and landed at Rochelle August 11th. After the death of Henry IV., the interest of De Monts, in whose service Champlain had been engaged, was entirely ruined, and the latter was obliged to go again to France in 1611. Charles de Bourbon, being commissioned by the Queen Regent as Vice-Roi of New France, appointed Champlain his lieutenant, with very extensive powers. He returned to Canada in 1613, and made new discoveries. His voyages across the Atlantic were frequent.

He was continued lieutenant-governor under that distinguished nobleman the Prince of Condé and Montmorency. In 1615, his zeal for the spiritual interests of the Indians induced him to bring with him a number of Recollets Fathers. He penetrated to Lake Ontario, and being wounded while assisting the Hurons against their enemies, was obliged to pass a whole winter among them. When he returned to Quebec in July, 1616, he was received as one risen from the dead. In July, 1629, owing to the sparseness of his forces, and the exhausted state of his men through famine, he was obliged to capitulate to an English armament under Sir David Kertk. He was carried to France in an English ship, and there he found the public sentiment much divided with regard to Canada ; some thinking it was not worth regaining, as it had cost the government vast sums without bringing any returns ; others deeming the fishing and fur trade great national objects, especially as a nursery for seamen. Champlain exerted himself to effect the recovery of the country, and Canada was restored by the treaty of St. Germain in 1632, with l'Acadie and Cape Breton.

7. In 1633 the company of New France resumed all their rights and appointed Champlain the governor. In a short time he was at the head of a new armament, furnished with a fresh reinforcement of Jesuit missionaries and settlers, as well as all kinds of necessaries for the welfare of the revived colony. His attention was now engrossed by the spiritual interests of the savages, whom it was his principal object to bring to the knowledge of the Christian religion. The number of ecclesiastical missionaries, exclusive of lay brothers, was now fifteen, the chief of whom were Le Jeune, De Noue, Masse, and Brebeuf. A mission was established among the Hurons ; the colony was gaining an accession of numbers and strength, and an attempt was just commencing to establish a college in Quebec, when the governor died, and was succeeded the following year by De Montmagny.

8. Champlain merited the title of the father of New France. He possessed an uncommon share of penetration and energy. His views were upright ; and in circumstances of difficulty no man could make a better choice of measures. He prosecuted his enterprises with constancy, and no dangers could shake his firmness. His zeal for the interests of his country was ardent and disinterested ; his heart was tender and compassionate towards the unhappy, and he was more attentive to the concerns of his friends than to his own. He was a faithful historian, a voyager who observed every thing with attention, skilful in geometry, and an experienced seaman.

9. It may not be easy to justify Champlain in taking an active part in the war against the Iroquois. It is even supposed by some that his love of adventure led him to arouse the spirit of the Hurons, and excite them to war. His zeal for the propagation of religion among the savages was so great, that he used to say that the salvation of one soul was of more value than the conquest of an empire ; and that kings ought not to think of extending their authority over idolatrous nations, except for the purpose of subjecting them to Jesus Christ.

179. JACQUES CARTIER AT STADACONA.

GARNEAU.

1. ACCORDING to the custom of that age, the Malo-in navigator, before putting to sea with his companions, would implore the protection of Him who commands the winds and the waves, and who was pleased then to extend from day to day the limits of the known world, by prodigies which more and more astonished men. He repaired with his crew, in a body, to the cathedral of St. Malo ; and there, after having assisted at a solemn mass and communicated devoutly, the adventurous mariners received from the bishop, clothed in his pontifical robes and surrounded by his clergy, the pastoral benediction.

2. The squadron, carrying 110 men and provisions for a long voyage, set sail with a fair wind in the month of May, 1535. Cartier had hoisted his flag, as Captain-General, on the Grande-Hermine, a vessel of 100 or 120 tons burden ; the two other vessels, much smaller, were commanded by Captains Guillaume le Breton and Marc Jalobert. Several gentlemen, such as Claude de Pont, Briand and Charles de la Pommeraye, served on board as volunteers. During the voyage, which was very long, many storms were encountered, which widely dispersed the three vessels.

3. It was only in the month of July that Cartier himself reached the Bay of Châteaux, situated in an island between Newfoundland and Labrador, and which he had appointed as a rendezvous for his little fleet; the two other vessels did not arrive there till several days later. After giving these last some time to rest, Cartier set out and steered at first in different directions. He saw a multitude of islands; and, after being obliged, by contrary winds, to seek a refuge in a harbor which he named St. Thomas, he set sail and entered, on St. Lawrence's day, a bay which was, perhaps, the mouth of the river St. John, to which he gave the name of the saint whose festival was that day celebrated—a name which he subsequently extended to the great river itself, and the gulf by which it discharges itself into the sea. Guided by the two savages he had brought with him, he at length entered that river, and ascended more than 200 leagues from the ocean. He stopped at the foot of an island agreeably situated, since named the Island of Orleans.

4. According to the report of his guides, the country was then divided into three sections. Saguenay extended from the island of Anticosti to the isle aux Coudres; Canada, of which the principal village was Stadacona, now Quebec, commencing at the latter island, and extending up the river towards Hochelaga, this last the richest and most populous part of the country.

5. The name of "Canada," here given by the natives to a part of the country, leaves no doubt as to the origin of the word, which signifies, in their language, groups of cabins, villages.

6. Cartier put these two savages ashore to talk with the natives, who at first took flight, but soon after returned and surrounded the vessel in their little bark canoes. They offered the French fish, maize, and fruits. Cartier received them politely, and had presents distributed among them. Next day the Agonbanna, that is to say, the chief of Stadacona, came to visit him, followed by twelve canoes full of natives. The interview was most amicable, and the French and the Indians separated well pleased with each other. Before leaving, the chief of Stadacona must needs kiss the arms of the French captain, which was one of the greatest marks of respect in use amongst those people.

7. As the season was advanced, Cartier took the bold resolution of passing the winter in the country. He got his ships into the river St. Charles, named by him Saint-Croix (Holy Cross), to put them in winter quarters under the village of Stadacona, which stood on a height towards the south. This part of the St. Lawrence, by the distribution of mountains, hills, and valleys, around the harbor of Quebec, is one of the grandest scenes in America.

8. Upwards from the gulf, the river long preserves an imposing, but wild and savage aspect. Its immense width, full ninety miles at its mouth, its numerous shoals, its fogs, its gusts of wind at certain seasons of the year, have made it a formidable place for navigators. The steep sides which bound it for more than a hundred leagues; the dark mountains north and south of the valley in which it flows, almost the entire breadth of which it occupies in some places; the islands, which become more numerous the further one ascends; finally, all the scattered remains of the obstacles which the great tributary of the ocean shattered and overturned in clearing for itself a passage to the sea, seize the imagination of the traveller who passes that way for the first time. But at Quebec the scene changes. Nature, so vast and so solemn, on the river below, becomes here smiling and diversified, though still maintaining its character of grandeur, especially since it has been embellished by the hand of man.

9. If it were given Jacques Cartier to come forth from the tomb to contemplate the vast country which he gave, with its primeval forests and barbarous hordes, to European civilization, what more noble spectacle could excite in his heart—the pride of a founder of empire, the sublime pride of those privileged men whose name grows daily with the consequences of their immortal actions? Cartier would see in Quebec one of the first cities of America, and in Canada one of the countries for which a high destiny is reserved.

180. JACQUES CARTIER AT HOCHELAGA.

ABBÉ FERLAND.

1. THE following morning, Cartier, having left his barks at the foot of St. Mary's Convent, set out, accompanied by some gentlemen and twenty sailors, to go visit the town of Hochelaga and the mountain at whose foot it was situated. After journeying about a league and a half, they were stopped by one of the chief men of the country, who made a long discourse, complimentary, no doubt, to the strangers; half a league further on, they found cultivated lands, and fields covered with cornstalks. In the midst of these fine fields was situate the town of Hochelaga, carefully fortified after the manner of the great Huron and Iroquois villages.

2. A circular palisade, twenty feet in height, and formed by a triple row of stakes, surrounded Hochelaga and served for its defence. The stakes of the middle row were planted straight; those of the two other rows crossed each other at top, and the whole was strongly bound together with branches. A single gate gave ingress to the town. Within the inclosure was a sort of gallery, furnished with stones ready to be hurled against the enemy who might attempt to climb the palisade. The town contained about fifty cabins, each of which was some fifty paces in length by twelve or fifteen in breadth. These habitations, constructed of bark sewed together, contained several chambers, each of which was occupied by a family. In the middle of the cabin there was reserved a common hall, where the fires were placed; shelves put up under the roof, served as lofts to store away the provision of maize.

3. Maize was the food of all seasons ; they ate it in cakes baked between stones heated for the purpose ; they boiled it over the fire ; and they also prepared from it a pottage, by adding to it peas, beans, large cucumbers, and fruits. The cultivation of the land, and fishing, furnished the inhabitants of Hochelaga with resources sufficient for all the wants of life. They busied themselves very little about the chase, being averse to leaving their village, and having no taste for the nomadic life, so dear to the tribes of Canada and Saguenay.

4. These people doubtless regarded the French as beings of a superior nature, for they brought to Cartier cripples and infirm persons as though begging of him to restore them to health. The Agonbanna, or king, would himself have recourse to the miraculous power of the French captain. Paralyzed in all his limbs, he was carried on a deer-skin by nine or ten men, who laid him on mats in the midst of the assembly. The sovereign's apparel was not more splendid than that of his subjects, half covered with wretched skins of wild beasts, only he wore around his head, as a mark of distinction, a red band embroidered with porcupines' quills. Seeing the confidence of these good people, and being himself full of faith, Cartier read over them the beginning of the gospel of St. John and the Passion of our Lord ; he prayed God, at the same time, to make himself known to that poor people plunged in the darkness of idolatry. He afterwards distributed presents among them, and left them well satisfied with his visit.

5. Several of them accompanied him to the mountain, about a quarter of a league distant from the town of Hochelaga. There he was so enchanted by the magnificent prospect which spread before him, that he gave to that place the name of Mont Royal, since changed into Montreal. To the north and south ran chains of mountains, between which, far as the eye could reach, extended a vast and fertile plain ; in the midst of these profound solitudes, and through thick forests already clothed in the brilliant tints of autumn, reposed in all its beauty the great river which he had ascended, as he saw it stretching away westward to regions yet unknown.

6. By means of signs the savages made him understand that beyond three falls, or rapids, like that before him, they could sail on the river for more than three moons ; then turning towards the north, they pointed out to him another great river descending also from the west, and flowing at the foot of the mountains. One of them seized a silver dagger, with its sheath of polished brass, and a chain from which hung the captain's whistle, and made signs that such metals as those were found far up the river. Cartier's imagination then opened before him the gates of the unknown west, hiding in its bosom rich treasures, and leading to golden regions like those of India and Cathay ; by advancing towards the sources of the river, he should find a passage shorter and more advantageous than that which Magellan had discovered for Spain.

7. Revelling in these bright dreams, with what pity must the Breton mariner have cast his eyes on the humble village of Hochelaga, with its bark huts, its wretched palisades, its narrow strips of maize, and its population sunk in barbarism. Nigh three centuries and a half have passed away since the day when Cartier, from the summit of Mont Royal, examined the neighborhood of Hochelaga. Were it given him to behold those scenes to-day, with what surprise would he contemplate the great and beautiful city which has replaced the Indian village. It would astonish the old navigator by its numerous and splendid monuments, by its harbor crowded with ships and bordered by a long line of quays, by its tubular bridge connecting the two banks of the river, by its numerous population stirred by the impulse of commerce and industry ; and how amazed he would be, following with his eyes the steamers launched amid those "three falls of water" which interested him so much, or ascending the rapid current to St. Mary, without the aid of wind or sail. How he would admire the valley of the great river, no longer covered with forests, but spreading before him to the verge of the horizon covered with fields, towns, and villages, traversed by railroads, along which glide, swift as the birds, long trains of carriages, guided by a pillar of smoke.

8. The depths of the west have been sounded, the vast countries they contain are long since opened to civilization; the mysterious sea announced to Cartier has been found afar off; the passage by which vessels were to reach it existed only in the tales of the savages. But, thanks to the industry and perseverance of man, a way of another kind will soon be marked out that will bring together the two oceans, and transport the riches of the east to the countries of old Europe.

181. THE CITY OF MONTREAL.

CHAUVEAU.

Hon. PIERRE J. O. CHAUVEAU, LL. D., chief Superintendent of Education for Lower Canada, late Solicitor-general, and late Provincial Secretary. Mr. Chauveau is the author of "Charles Guérin," a Canadian novel, and of many other works, both in French and English. The extract here given is from his book on the Visit of the Prince of Wales to America.

1. THOUGH Montreal is not so old as Quebec, its early history is as interesting, and still more stirring. The founding of this city, on the very confines of the country of the Mohawks, whose murderous inroads were the terror of the continent, was an act of great boldness, if not absolute temerity.

2. On the 17th May, 1642, M. de Maisonneuve, the agent of a company formed in France, under rather surprising circumstances, for the purpose of founding a city in the country of the Iroquois, caused a small chapel, the first erected on the Island, to be consecrated by Père Vimont, the superior of the Jesuits then in the colony. The Island itself was, on the 15th August following,—the festival of the Assumption,—dedicated to the Virgin Mary. Hence the name of Ville-Marie, by which the town was long designated, and which is even now occasionally met with in ecclesiastical documents.

3. In 1663, the Sulpicians of Paris became possessed of this fine domain, and soon established a house, far wealthier now than the one from which it springs, and almost as old. During a long period the small settlement possessed for its protection against the hostile tribes nothing but a feeble palisade and the indomitable courage of its inhabitants. Sixty years later the town was surrounded by a wall, which was not removed until 1808, when it was found to be an impediment to the growth of the city, and quite inadequate to its purpose in a strategical point of view.

4. The line of these fortifications, as laid down on an old plan made in 1758, extends towards the west to the space now occupied by McGill-street; following thence, in a northerly direction, nearly the line of Craig street, it terminates in the east,—a little below the citadel, which occupied part of the ground now taken up by Dalhousie Square, and extending to St. Denis-street.

5. The population of Montreal in 1720, was 3,000 souls and of the whole of Canada not more than 10,000.¹

6. In the year 1765 a conflagration destroyed almost the whole town, involving 215 families in a general ruin, and causing a loss of about $400,000. Public generosity was appealed to both in England and in Canada, and considerable sums were raised by subscription for the relief of the sufferers. That part which the fire had destroyed was rebuilt, and much improved,—a circumstance by no means unusual in such cases,—and Montreal soon rose from her ashes with renewed vigor and prosperity.

7. In 1775, Montgomery, with some troops of the Revolution, occupied it for a few months, and then abandoned it. It was much exposed in 1812; nay, had De Salaberry been unsuccessful at Chateauguay, it would in all probability have again fallen into the hands of the enemy.

8. Montreal was the great mart of the fur trade with the Indians under the French and the English. Here the renowned bourgeois of the Northwest lived in princely style while their hardy voyageurs carried the trade into the most distant regions of the continent. The town is not now dependent on this trade, which indeed has taken another direction, but by the vigorous energy and activity of its merchants has become the great entrepôt of the trade between England and Upper Canada, and even of that between the former country and some of the States of the American Union.

¹ Montréal et ses principaux Monuments.—Published by E. Senécal, 1860

9. The obstructions in Lake St. Peter, which prevented vessels of great draught reaching the port, were removed by dredging; canals were made, and extensive wharves and basins were built to accommodate the shipping; railways were constructed,—one to Portland, securing a direct communication with the seaboard at all seasons, and this prosperous and enterprising city, stimulated by the healthy development of the country, acquired a commercial importance which has increased ever since. At present it is connected by rail with River du Loup, Quebec, Portland, Sherbrooke, New York, Toronto, Sarnia, Detroit, and Ottawa. In 1859, the value of its exports was $3,044,000, and its imports amounted to $15,553,000.

10. The population is generally estimated at 92,000, and 101,000 with the banlieu; about one-half is of French origin, and upwards of two thirds belong to the Roman Catholic faith. The wards St. Lawrence, St. Lewis, St. Mary, and St. Antoine, are in a great measure peopled by Franco-Canadians. St. Ann's ward, comprising Griffintown, is principally inhabited by the Irish population, which is also distributed in the St. Lawrence ward, and the St. Mary's—often called the Quebec suburbs. The English, Scotch, and Americans, dwell in the West, St. Antoine, and Centre wards. There are also French, Italians, Belgians, Swiss, and many Germans, of whom about one-half are Roman Catholics; of the other half, some are of Jewish faith and the remainder are Protestants.

11. The city, with its villas, gardens, and orchards, covers about 2,000 acres. Rows of trees line Beaver Hall, Craig, Sherbrooke, and St. Denis streets, their cool and refreshing shade adding comfort to the dwellings, which in appearance are often very elegant. In the windows of the shops of Notre-Dame and St. James streets, may be seen all that the seduc-tive arts of luxury and elegance can display. McGill and St. Paul streets, and the cross streets leading to Notre-Dame, are occupied by the higher branches of trade, to accommodate which splendid buildings have been erected.

12. Montreal has undergone so great a change during the last twenty years, that a citizen returning after an absence extending over such a lapse of time, would hardly know it again. Many of the streets are wider; its wooden houses, destroyed by the great conflagration of 1852, have been replaced by buildings of brick; very handsome edifices meet the eye on all sides; and whole districts have risen, as if by enchantment, where fields and orchards stood before. The orchards producing the fameuse and calville apples, which have earned for Montreal deserved celebrity, are, we fear, greatly reduced in extent; and horticulturists would do well to look to it in time, else this important article of commerce, upon which the town has always prided itself, will cease to be a source of profit. It is certainly impossible to witness the improvements taking place every day without feeling great satisfaction; yet one cannot see the relics of a former age, such as the Seminary of St. Sulpice and the Hotel-Dieu, disappear, without a feeling of regret.

13. The great church of Notre-Dame rises majestically over all the surrounding buildings, and from every point where a view of the city can be had it is still a conspicuous object. The old church, that stood upon the same site, was erected in the year 1672. On the 3d September, 1824, the corner stone of the present structure was laid, and it was opened for public worship on the 18th July, 1829. The style is plain Gothic; its high and not inelegant proportions always impress a stranger favorably. Its dimensions are: length, 255 feet; front, 134 feet; elevation of side walls, 61 feet. It has two square towers, rising to a height of 220 feet, which face the Place d'Armes or French Square. The eastern tower contains a chime of eight bells, the western supports the Gros-bourdon, an enormous bell weighing 29,400 pounds. The interior of this church wears, from its bareness, a cold and cheerless aspect, which can only be removed by the temporary naments used on certain occasions, and the presence of its congregation,—a throng of 10 or 12,000 human beings, who pass through its long aisles and galleries. The works of the great composers are performed by choirs regularly trained for the purpose; and a fine organ, which when finished will be one of the most powerful in America, sends its harmonious tones thrilling through the vast hall.

14. The building next in size is the Bonsecours Market. Its cost is put down in Mr. Lovell's Directory at $287,000. The Court House, built in the Ionic order, is a still more costly structure. The Theological College (Priest's Farm), the Banks, the Jesuits' College (on De Bleury-street), and the new Hotel-Dieu, are all buildings of great dimensions. Christ-church Cathedral is a fine structure; and among the other churches of the city, St. Patrick's, St. Andrew's, St. Peter's, St. James', the Wesleyan Methodist, and the Unitarian, deserve special notice.

15. With one exception, all these edifices are built of a grey stone, found in inexhaustible quarries near the town. The stone employed in the construction of Christ-church Cathedral is of a much darker color; the corners and other salient points, relieved by white Caen stone dressings, form a striking contrast. The roof is of slate, inclining in color to deep violet, and is surmounted by a light traceried ornament running along the apex. The style is a highly ornamented Norman Gothic; nothing is wanted to render the building complete. The spire springs from the intersection of the transepts with the nave, the glittering cross by which it is capped standing 14 feet from the ground. The length of this building is 187 feet, and its breadth 70 feet. St. Peter's Church (Pères Oblats) is built of finely dressed stone, and is supported by flying buttresses. The interior, containing pretty chapels stuccoed in imitation of marble, is richly ornamented, and its arrangements seem perfect. Fine paintings representing the Passion, by Mr. Plamondon, a Canadian artist, form the principal ornaments of the interior of St. Patrick's Church. The architecture of the Unitarian Church is Byzantine.

16. There are six nunneries in the city, some maintaining several establishments. The Hotel-Dieu, established in 1644, by Mme. de Bullion, and Mlle. Manse, is the most ancient. The Canadian order of nuns known as the Congrégation de Notre-Dame was founded, in 1653, by Marguerite Bourgeois. In 1747, Madame Youville, who at that time was at the head of the Sœurs Grises, undertook the management of the hospital established under the name of l'Hôpital-Général, by M. Charron, in 1692. The other convents have been but recently established.

17. Montreal possesses a great number of institutions of learning, including excellent public schools, and many other establishments supported by private enterprise. The total number of children attending in 1859, was 14,364; of these 3002 frequented the schools of the Christian Brothers, whose principal edifice is among the finest of the kind in the city. The nuns of the Congrégation also teach 3,187 pupils.

18. The McGill University, founded by the liberality of the wealthy citizen whose name it bears, and who by will left the greater portion of his fortune for this object, has lately received great extensions. In addition to the two fine buildings situated at the foot of the mountain and close to the reservoir of the aqueduct, it holds in the immediate vicinity of Beaver Hall, an edifice devoted to its preparatory or high school. Besides the Faculties of Law and Medicine of this University there are also in operation a school of Medicine and a school of Law. The classical colleges of Montreal and St. Mary are two of the most important institutions of the country, and to the select Ladies' Boarding-Schools of Villa-Maria and Mont St. Joseph may be added those of the nuns of Jesus and Mary, at Longueuil, and of the Ladies of the Sacred Heart, situated at Sault-aux-Récollets,—the last is decidedly the handsomest building of the sort in Canada.

[illegible]

OCT 9 RETURN

EDUC NO 24 '71

OCT 31 RETURN

4P 11'73

MAR 3 1964	RETURN
---------------	--------

NGV	7 RETURN
-----	----------

1678

OCT 16 RETURN

OCT 26 RETURN

EDUCATION CURRICULUM

562916

PE Metropolitan readers.
1117
A1M59

CURRICULUM
EDUCATION LIBRARY

PE 1117 A1 M59 c.1

Metropolitan readers. Arranged

CURRHIST

0 0004 5993 821